C. F. KING IS RELEASED IN $35,000 BAIL.

Sureties Sharply Questioned by Court Before Bond Is Finally Accepted.

FAMILY CHEERS PRISONER

Leaves for Home After Being Held in Custody Several Hours.

Cardenio F. King, the convicted financial agent, after spending several unhappy hours yesterday afternoon in the custody of the deputy sheriffs connected with the Superior Criminal Court, was released in $35,000 bail at 6:35 p. m., and left the court house in a happy frame of mind.

Accompanied by his wife, two sons, attorneys and some friends, he ate dinner at a downtown hotel, after which he went to his home in Brookline.

King secured his release only after one of the most remarkable and searching examinations ever given bondmen by any judge of the Superior Criminal Court. Two of those appearing on the bail bonds were twice called to the bench by Judge Schofield and questioned as to whether any property, money or any consideration had been made them to appear on the $35,000 bond of Mr. King, while five of the others appearing on the bond were also closely examined and questioned at length by the court as to their interest in the case, and their assets and liabilities.

The court piled question upon question to each of the seven persons, after which a conference followed with the two attorneys representing King.

Bond Finally Accepted.

Finally, Judge Schofield requested Lawyer Gore to identify both Salman Sirk of the Revere House and Rosa Bernstein of Malden, through her husband, as parties whom he, Gore, personally knew.

Calling Mr. Sirk to the bench for a second time, the judge asked Mr. Sirk if he was aware that any false statements made by him in the affadavit of bail, or to the court, constituted perjury, for which crime he might be imprisoned. The witness reiterated his statement under oath and denied that he had received any guarantee or indemnity or promise of reward for going on the bond.

Mrs. Bernstein and her husband were also scrutinized and questioned, but declared they had been made no promise of financial or other consideration for going on the bond. The Bernstein woman cannot write and had to make a cross for her signature. They declared they had become interested through a friend and that they did not know King personally.

The bail was finally accepted by the Judge and King was called from the detention room where he had been kept waiting. He strode out with firm, buoyant step to the railing and was then released on the bail furnished.

He immediately left the court room and, wended his way along through the dark gloomy building to the Hotel Bellevue for his first good meal of the day.

Wife First to Qualify.

Mollie L. King, wife of the defendant, was the first to qualify on the bail bond, in her affidavit she swears she resides at No. 60 Powell street, Brookline, that she was the wife of the defendant, and that she owned property at No. 214 Winthrop street, Winthrop, taxed for $8,450.

Mabel G. Bradfield, a young woman, went on the bond. She gave her residence as No. 478 Fourth street, South Boston, and declared herself to be the treasurer of the Mechanics' Loan and Trust Company at No. 202 Washington street. Her property is real estate at No. 32 Yarmouth street and No. 101 Cambridge street, Allston, taxed for $11,150 and mortgaged for $8,800. She swore her property, over and above any debts, is worth $3,000.

Mary L. Colton, an elderly woman friend to block, offered her bond her house and land at No. 24 Cottage Park street, Winthrop, valued at $7,500 and bearing a mortgage of $1,500. She "qualified" as herself to be worth property free and clear to the value of $5,000.

Salman Sirk, residing at Revere House, declared himself to be worth $100,000. He offered as bondsman property the estates at Nos. 2140 and 2150 Washington street, Roxbury, taxed for $60,000 and valued at $85,000. Many other pieces of property mentioned in his bond as the Elliot Church. Sirk is also owner of real estate in Lowell.

Rosa Bernstein, No. 40 Belmont street, Malden, declared herself to own real estate valued at $6,000 free and clear. She bonded the property at No. 67 Lewis street Revere.

Alvah G. Wheeler, a farmer of Concord, Mass., went bail on real estate located in Fitchburg and Concord and declared himself to be worth $20,000 over all indebtedness.

John W. Nutter, in the machine business in Chelsea and residing at No. 80 Heard street, Chelsea, went bond on his property at Nos. 78 and 80 Heard street, taxed for $6,500 and mortgaged for $2,000. He declared he held property valued at $6,000 free and clear.

Fear J. T. Trowbridge Dead in Earthquake, Says Naples Report

Noted Author and Bostonian Victim of Calabrian Horror, Friends Believe.

Naples, Jan. 2.—No news has been heard from J. T. Trowbridge, the noted author of Boston, Mass., or of Consul Cheney and his family and it is regarded as certain that they are dead. Consul General Hall, who is here, declared to-night that in his opinion there is not the remotest possibility that they escaped.

The later stories from the devastated district add to the horror. Crowds are looting shops fighting for bread or anything that will sustain life. Stocks of spoiled fish are being devoured raw by the famished multitude. Representatives of some of the oldest and wealthiest families are fighting with street beggars for miserable pittances of the spoiled food.

CALLS HARRIMAN REAL 'FRISCO BOSS

Philadelphia, Jan. 2.—"Abe Reef was never the political boss of San Francisco, neither was W. F. Harran, head of the legal department of the Southern Pacific railroad. Reef's dead sponsor, Harran was a tool, Reef a disbursing agent. E. H. Harriman was the boss, the corrupt ionist and he played that part because he wished to exploit the California public for the purpose of achieving his own selfish ends," said Francis J. Heney of San Francisco, prosecutor of Abe Reef concluding a forceful arraignment at the City Club to-day just after the luncheon. The members who had met to hear him almost arose in their fer in their enthusiasm and cheered him.

Mr. Heney dwelt upon the necessity of reforming political abuses by exposing the system at its fountain head. "In the Pacific Coast city all corruption flowed from two sources. On the right hand we had the public service corporations that wanted something from the people for nothing, and on the left we had disorderly houses and dives. And strangely enough although the so-called best citizens were at the head of the corporations these two sinister influences were joined.

"But even in the public service corporation locality were echoes. Behind them was the Southern Pacific railroad with W. F. Harriman at the head of the legal department, and Harran was also a con. His boss is in New York."

SAVES WOMAN AND HER CHILD FROM DEATH

Brave Railroader Offers His Life for Others.

Meriden, Ct., Jan. 2.—Risking his own life to save Mrs. Philip Gaudette and her child who were on the railroad tracks, Michael Donlen ran in front of the New York Boston express at the station here this afternoon. He saved both, but was himself probably fatally injured. Mrs. Gaudette and her child escaped practically unhurt, while a porter at the station was waiting for the incoming express. Instantly the child slipped away from the mother and ran out upon the tracks. Mrs. Gaudette sprang after her. Donlen saw the act and in a single bound separated the mother and child, throwing them in opposite directions clear of the engine. Donlen could not get away in time and was struck.

DANBURY FARMER GORED TO DEATH BY WILD BULL

James Reynolds Found Dead in Pasture by His Son.

Danbury, Ct., Jan. 2.—After a battle that must have lasted nearly a half hour, James Reynolds, a prominent farmer of Ridgebury, was gored to death by an enraged bull in one of his pastures this afternoon.

When found by his son, John, lying in a pool of his own blood, five minutes after Reynolds was literally plowed up by the infuriated animal.

The bull's sharp horns probably penetrated Reynolds' flesh many times before the final thrust was made, and the animal vented his rage by goring and stamping the man's life out.

SEMINARY GIRLS GO FOR NATION'S HEAD

Story of Washington Incident Stirs Their Resentment.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—Resentment as intsult said to have been heaped upon attendants of the National Park Seminary near Washington as President Roosevelt, and members of the alumni association of the Young Women's College prepared resolutions to-day scoring the chief executive.

The meeting of the Alumnae Association was held early in the morn at Mrs. Shall Fields and the reported action of President Roosevelt in the case, by some of one of the students who was out riding when the party passed in question. The meeting was held behind closed doors and no one but a graduate of Rosary could participate.

A resolution was presented in which President Roosevelt was denounced in scathing terms. A former president of the association, however, learned of the intended resolutions and succeeded in succeeding them to withhold the condemnatory paper.

Notwithstanding the efforts of the older and more conservative members of the meeting to prevent any outbreak against the President a number of hasty things were said against the chief Executive.

WILLIAM R. HEARST GIVES $1,000 TO FUND

San Francisco, Jan. 2.—William Hendolph Hearst to-day sent a subscription of $1,000 to the Italian earthquake relief fund.

SAY SEARLES PAYS NO TAXES ON $10,000,000 ESTATE.

State Officials Unearth Striking Disparity in List of Methuen Assessors.

TOWN OFFICERS OBJECT

Liable to $1,000 Fine, They Still Debate Recommendation of Commissioner.

There is a clash between Massachusetts State authorities and Millard Emerson, Henry M. Hall and Samuel Rushton, Selectmen and Assessors of the ancient town of Methuen, because the personal property valuation of Edward F. Searles, multi-millionaire, is not increased $10,000,000. It is contended that Mr. Searles pays no taxes whatever upon that vast amount.

Since the State tax furrets were put on the trail untaxed personal property to the appraised value of $21,000,000 has been discovered.

Eclipses the Cheney Case.

There was a sensation when it was declared that in the town of Dover the estate controlled by B. F. Cheney, husband of beautiful Julia Arthur, a former actress, is escaping taxation upon $6,000,000. This discovery has been eclipsed by the revelation in regard to the Searles estate.

"The $10,000,000 Searles property upon which the State Congress wants to lay taxes collected is nearly one-third of the total of all the other property found untaxed in the State since the "tax dodger" law went into operation.

At present Mr. Searles is taxed in Methuen only upon a personal property valuation of $66,500. These figures have been known, however, to the taxpayers for years in the town. But it is said in regard to his personal property holdings that one work of art in his music room, a famous painting known as "The Baths of Caracalla" should be assessed for more than the entire present valuation.

It is declared at the State House that under the law the Methuen assessors are liable to a fine of $1,000 for not levying a tax upon $10,000,000 in the case of Mr. Searles. If this was done, it is said, other taxpayers there, mostly farmers, small tradesmen and owners of modest town houses, would be benefited by having their taxes reduced seventy per cent, the total valuation of the town being in $5,000,000, and state officials propose by the new Searles assessment to lay the burden upon Mr. Searles which we think proper because of local conditions. The people have been much for the town. He has been very generous with his fortune and very public spirited.

We are simply acting under the law. We find these facts in securities and that Mr. Searles is a resident of Methuen. The law says he must pay taxes on his personal property and we are now waiting to learn what Methuen assessors propose to do. They did not answer our letter any more than to acknowledge its receipt, and we were forced last week to send Supervisor Robert G. Parker up there to see what they proposed to do. We are promised an answer next week.

"Mr. Patton did not go to Methuen and could not give the assessors the threat of a $1,000 fine. He simply called their attention to the provisions of the law.

A law last year provided for the appointment of three assessors instead of five assessors who are to act under the Tax Commissioner and have supervision over all the town and city assessors in the State. It is what can be done to force the local assessors under the law, if they have refused themselves what to do," said Assessor Hall to the Boston Sunday American.

"We expect early in the week to report our decision to the tax commissioner."

Romance of Searles' Life.

There is great romance in the life of Edward F. Searles, who is one of the richest men in the world. He was born in Methuen and in the hour he was there he rose to exalted affluence through his exquisite taste as a house decorator. That refined him the acquaintance of Mrs. Mark Hopkins, widow of one of the railroad kings of America. He was a commanding figure in the building of Leland Stanford and the Southern Pacific roads, and left great wealth at his death. The meeting was in San Francisco, but she had a mansion in Great Barrington in the Berkshires to which she went to spend a Summer in the hills of Massachusetts. It was there that one of the decorators sent by a New York firm to refurnish the house.

He is a man of rare personal charm and Cupid came down from the heavens to play pranks with love hearts. In November, 1887, Mrs. Hopkins became the bride of Mr. Searles and they went to his boyhood home in Methuen to live. It seemed as if Aladdin and his lamp were in their midst. Such a wonderful transformation was never before seen in a staid old New England town. The Searles home became one of the largest and most beautiful in the world.

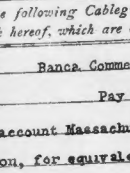
Archbishop Asks Catholics to Aid Earthquake Sufferers

In every Catholic Church in the Archdiocese of Boston to-day there will be read from the pulpit an appeal by Archbishop William H. O'Connell to the congregation for contributions to aid the earthquake sufferers in Calabria. The Archbishop's appeal reads:



ARCHBISHOP W. H. O'CONNELL

"WE feel that those of the faithful who can afford to do so will wish to contribute to the immediate relief of the earthquake sufferers in southern Italy.

There are many now on foot for collecting funds, but an opportunity for those who wish to show their Catholic fellowship with these poor sufferers will be given on Sunday, Jan. 3, by the collection at all the Masses.

The necessity for immediate aid requires a prompt remittance to the chancellor of all the money collected for this end.

"Those who cannot at this time aid the sufferers by their donation can help them immensely by their prayers. The terrible losses and sufferings caused by the earthquake and tidal wave are appalling, and in this hour of their affliction our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to the grief-stricken people of Italy. They are bound to us by many ties of affection and common brotherhood. They are of the household of our Faith. Their churches and houses are gone; they have been bereft of all they possessed and now they are face to face with poverty and privation.

"Our urgent duty, then, is to do what we can in ministering promptly to their needs, and, therefore, this opportunity is being offered to those who desire to aid the afflicted sufferers.

"The response of those whom God has blessed with plenty will be now, as it has always been, prompt and generous.

"I also ask that immediate prayers be offered for those who perished in the disaster and for the survivors, that in this, the sad hour of their sorrow, they may be comforted and strengthened by the consolations of their holy religion."

Boston and All State Rallies to Aid Stricken Italy.

Lee, Higginson & Company, treasurers of the Massachusetts Italian Relief Fund, cabled a draft yesterday for 250,000 lire, or about $50,000, for the Italian Red Cross.

By last night the Massachusetts treasurers had received $95,545 for the relief of the suffering Italian survivors of the earthquake. Of this amount the Massachusetts Branch of the American National Red Cross gave $17,093.53 and the Massachusetts Relief Fund $78,451.73.

The Italian Relief Committee of New England, with headquarters at No. 178 North street, which is conducting a house to house canvass of Boston, raised $1,300 by last night.

Pope Pius X yesterday gave $200,000 additional for the work of relief. This makes the Vatican's total contribution $400,000, equal to that donated by King Victor Emmanuel of Italy.

The Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches of Greater Boston will today make collections for the fund.

The latest estimate of the total number of dead is roughly given as 200,000 showing that it was the greatest cataclysm recorded in the history of mankind.

Three hundred and fifty thousand men, women and children are dying of starvation in the ruined cities and towns of Calabria and Sicily. Dogs and human beings fight with each other for food.

Continued shocks of earthquake were felt yesterday and maddened the already terrorized survivors in Messina and Reggio and other towns and cities. The earth cracked and jets of boiling water spouted forth. Many vessels crowded with refugees arrived at Naples and Palermo. The King has directed that the injured and sick be concentrated at Naples and Rome. Even to-day living people are being taken from the ruins of the wrecked cities. Queen Helena was slightly hurt while helping rescuers in Messina. She has been urged to return to Rome and although threatened with prostration refuses to go.

REPORT AMERICAN TOURISTS ALL SAFE

Washington, Jan. 2.—The State Department received the following dispatch from Ambassador Griscom at Rome:

"A Swiss refugee, named Saraww, a responsible merchant of forty years' residence in Messina, arrived in Rome to-day. He informed me that Lupton (view consul) at Messina, escaped uninjured.

"Saraww went with Lupton and found the remains of our consulate at Messina, a three-story house, crumbled to the ground. It was impossible to search the debris thoroughly, but they satisfied themselves that Cheney, consul at Messina, and his wife must have perished.

Saraww and Lupton took refuge on the Standard Oil steamer Chesapeake and later on a British man-of-war.

Lupton was alive and well when last seen on December 31. Saraww informs me that he does not know of a single American citizen residing in Messina. Many travelers staying in the Hotel Trinacria were all saved except the Swedish and one Italian woman who were killed. He assures me that Thorntia escaped injury. As many of Americans who were there are reported to be doing splendid relief work."

BURTON UNANIMOUS CHOICE FOR SENATE

Columbus, O., Jan. 2.—Theodore E. Burton, of Cuyahoga county, for years one of the leaders of the House of Representatives, and chairman of the committee on rivers and harbors, is to-night virtually senator-elect from Ohio, successor of Joseph Benson Foraker.

This is the result of the caucuses of the State Senate and House, who confirmed the Republican majorities of those bodies, which were held this afternoon. No other Republican candidate will be suggested. This was made manifest in the caucuses, when were nominations for the man who scored one of the greatest victories ever the machine in the history of the Buckeye State.

The formal election will be held January 12 at noon, but every member of the majority entered the caucuses and is pledged to abide by the decision. Burton was present to enjoy his triumph. He remained at his hotel until sent for to address the members of the General Assembly, who desired to hear what he had to say.

SIX FAMILIES FLEE HOUSE IN FLAMES

Thirty-five men, women and children, clad in their night clothes, rushed in fright from the three-story wooden building, No. 15 Monument, North End, at 1:15 this morning. The fire started from some unknown cause in the grocery store of Antonio Romano, on the first floor. Romano is the owner of the building.

Patrolman McEachern of Station 1, rushed into the building through the smoke-choked halls, arousing every occupant of the six families sleeping on the different floors.

Panic reigned and some threatened to jump from the windows. The firemen called to them that they would be soon taken out and members of the companies ran into the building and helped McEachern. The damage was not more than $500.

TAFT'S AMBITION IS TO BREAK THE "SOLID" SOUTH.

Told by Alabamans They're Glad He Won, "Over Their Own Protest."

INVITED TO BIRMINGHAM

President-elect Says His Heart Is Set on Obliterating Sectional Feeling.

Augusta, Ga., Jan. 2.—President-elect Taft to-day admitted that it is the greatest ambition of his life to break the "Solid South." Not, as he explained, to make it Republican in faith, but simply to make it, as is certain other sections of the United States, "debatable ground on election day."

The speech was one of the most important Judge Taft has ever made. It was in reply to continued urging on the part of a delegation from Birmingham, Ala., that he reconsider his own personal feelings and visit that city before he returns to Washington. The invitation was delivered by General Rufus N. Rhodes, who, in a fervid speech said:

"We men of Birmingham regard the result of the last election as a benediction from God Almighty to the people of the South, over their own protest."

Mr. Taft was plainly moved by the fervency of the appeal, but stuck to his original intention and declined the invitation. He compromised, however, by promising that if possible he would go to Birmingham en route home from Panama. But if not, he will surely go there after he is inaugurated, he declared.

"Of course, I am touched by your earnest words," he said, "as it is an evidence among the thoughtful men of the South of the earnest hope that the South is not to take one political complexion or another, but that it is to become a place where politics are, as in the rest of the country, a debatable proposition."

The President-elect then declared that he intends visiting all the leading cities of the South shortly after his inauguration. He then said:

"Do not think that I expect a great revolution or a landslide in the political character to this movement that is very much in evidence in every section of the South. What I welcome is an agitation which means independence of action, that is all. If the party of which I am the representative were to succeed in controlling two or three states in the South it would by no means inure to the benefit of that party, for the reason that the solidity of the South's vote in the Electoral College has made a number of the states in the North solid for the party. All I have to hope for is that the time is approaching when there shall be no North, no South, no East, no West, so far as political lines and subdivisions are concerned."

Judge Taft then paid high tribute to the welcome he has received in the "heart of the south," where he has been greeted.

Republican National Chairman Frank H. Hitchcock returned to-night to deny confirm the statement that he has written the Republican members of the Oregon Legislature advising them to violate their primary pledges and vote as directed by the ghost of former Governor Chamberlain, Democrat, for United States senator from that state.

TWO DEATHS LAID AT THE DOOR OF ALMSHOUSE OFFICIALS.

Long Island Inmate's Letter to Alderman Curley Starts Investigation.

NEGLIGENCE IS CHARGED

Dr. Holmes Denies Men Are Abused, and Explains Conditions at Institution.

Alderman James M. Curley last night startled the Board of Aldermen, who were holding their final session, when he read charges made by Michael Connor in a letter to him dust through neglect of the officials at the City Almshouse at Long Island one man had been frozen to death and another allowed to die unattended in his bed.

The Aldermen, by a vote of seven to four, directed the trustees of the institution to thoroughly investigate Connor's charges.

Connor, who is an inmate of the City Almshouse, wrote a letter to Alderman Curley making his sensational charges against the officials of the institution.

Aged Man Found Frozen.

Connor charged that one of the inmates, Sampson by name, over seventy years of age, was found frozen to death back of the dock on the island on December 15. He declared that Sampson's death was directly chargeable to the neglect of the officials.

Connor also alleged that an inmate who had been admitted on December 7 had been forced to go to work when he was in no condition to do so. To substantiate this Connor says the man was found dead in his bed the day following.

Connor, in addition, declared that the institution was being conducted without regard to proper economy in that the officials maintained employes there whose services could be dispensed with without injury to the service.

Parker Fought Motion.

Alderman Curley made a hard effort to have the Aldermen refer the charges to the committee on public institutions, but the motion was defeated by a vote of 7 to 4. Alderman Parker, who was formerly on the pauper institutions board, said he thought the charges were unfounded. He vigorously opposed the motion.

Alderman Curley made a speech in which he declared that an investigation was necessary of the City Almshouse, was not on Long Island last night.

Holmes Denies Charges.

"This matter of an investigation and charges being preferred by all these men," said Dr. G. W. Holmes, resident physician at the institution. "I don't even know who this man, Connor, is. Of course there have been some sudden deaths here on Long Island. We have about 1,000 inmates and many of them are old an infirm and sudden deaths are bound to occur.

"I know of no reason why charges should be preferred against the conduct of the institution. I am certain they are unfounded. No man has been frozen to death here as you may know positively. The man, Sampson, died of apoplexy in the hospital.

"The man Connor says died in bed after being made to work, died of enlargement of the heart. Since I have been here, three years, some four or five persons have been found dead in their beds and their deaths have been sudden at that, but they were all due to natural causes.

Invites Inquiry.

"I prefer to say nothing about the proposed examination as that is in the province of Dr. Dunlin. So far as I am personally concerned I am entirely satisfied to face any inquiry. I examine the inmates as they are received here and they are put to such tasks as their condition warrants.

"Another official connected with the Almshouse said last night:

"The William S. Sampson of whom Michael Connor speaks, was seventy years of age. He was a subscriber to the Almshouse on March 29, 1905. His last Boston address was 56 A St., Roxbury street.

"On December 14 he was seen to fall to the ground behind the barn. Almost immediately he was carried into the house. He was conscious at the time and said he felt sick. On December 15 he died in the hospital of apoplexy.

"He was in the Almshouse until the day he took sick. He did nothing at all. Dr. Holmes attended him. There is no mystery about his death.

"This other case to which Connor refers is that of Alfred P. Boudrow, a man forty-five years of age. He had been admitted on December 7, 1908, and died of heart disease December 10. He was found dead by the watchman, who makes half hourly inspections.

"When he was admitted it was known he had heart disease and he was given the lightest work he just enough work to occupy his mind.

"The man Connor was admitted here August 23, 1902, and has been here continually ever since. He got a job as fifty-seven when admitted. He is employed in the hospital kitchen and that is a place I should like to have if I were a pauper. He has a good place and no cause whatever for complaint.

Denies Having Extra Help.

"As to his charge that we have too many employes here it is necessary to say that last May fifteen of the assistants here were discharged."

PICKED CARTRIDGE WITH KNIFE; SHOT

Shot in the temple by a bullet from his own pistol, John Cooling, a boy of fourteen living at No. 74 Union street, Lynn, is today conscious and in little danger of death at the Lynn Hospital.

He was firing off the weapon in front of his home last night, and one of the cartridges failed to explode. John picked it up with his jack knife, and it went off with the barrel of the gun pointed directly at his head.

The boy fell to the ground, but arose without assistance, and after being removed to the hospital told the police and surgeons how the accident occurred.

The bullet is still in his head, but it is not believed that it penetrated the skull or that the brain was injured. The hospital authorities say he has an excellent chance of recovery.

The youth is the son of Mrs. Margaret Cooling.

PREDICTS SOCIETY FAD IN BALLOONING

Mrs. H. H. Crayton Tells Back Bay Women Delights of Sailing High in Sky.

"Ballooning excels in comfort and delight all other means of transportation," declared Mrs. H. H. Clayton, wife of the professor of meteorology at Blue Hill Observatory, before the members of Warren Chapter, D. A. R., at the home of Mrs. George W. Coleman on Marlborough street, yesterday.

"With proper equipment, a good pilot and good weather, there is no more danger in ballooning than in motoring, driving or riding," said Mrs. Clayton, describing the trip which she made in the "Boston" at North Adams.

"One feels the most perfect sense of freedom as one shoots up into the blue dome above. My ascension amounted almost to a delirium, the strangeness, delicious fear of air the sense of breathless, almost intoxicating.

"I am thankful that I have lived to see the conquest of the air," she continued. "The time has now given one the most curious feeling, an indescribable thrill.

"There is nothing else but will give one such a complete change of climate, such variety and delight. I am sure that then the time will soon come when American women will be as fond of the new sport of balloon and keeping pace with their foreign sisters in country enthusiasm.

"Although I have always been dizzy when at the edge of a precipice, and am a nervous subject, I experienced no discomfort from ballooning. The trip was a wonderful and delightful delight.

"When the rail, "All hands let go," was called from the deck of the Blue Hill, one great, long, smooth glide upwards, I assure you, was the flag of my country and scattering hundreds of little flags to the cheering throng below, we were suddenly transported into a realm of wonder, and from our lofty altitude had a novel point of view.

"Far below us we could see a motor that had come to grief and the chauffer laboring underneath. It was a good sight, it seemed compared to ours.

"Then as twilight approached and I was told that my wonder journey must end, I cared the thrilling moment when I was permitted to press the valve that let us down. The feeling of delight at the end was that I did not know the exact moment when we touched the ground, and the most wonderful journey of my life was over.

"The crowd rushed madly to spring from the very earth when a balloon alights, crowded around us and, feeling a little faint, I was glad to extend just the merest hand for assistance.

"I am most enthusiastic and feel that with the conditions right there is no more danger in ascending than any of the other things women now commonly enjoy, such as motoring or yachting."

EXPECT GOMPERS TO SPEAK IN HUB

President Samuel Gompers and Vice-President John Mitchell of the American Federation of Labor, who were recently invited to speak in Faneuil Hall, will probably be present and speak at the mass meeting being arranged for January 20, Faneuil Hall by the Boston unions.

Secretary Frey has received several letters from both labor men, saying that they will be present. It is possible, also, that they were arranging to come and that they will do so unless exceptional or important business intervenes.

Acceptances of invitations have been received from Governor-elect Eben S. Draper, Lieutenant A. P. of L. and other labor leaders of national importance.

NEW YORK MAN DIES IN CITY HALL PARK

Leading Real Estate Broker Victim of Head Injuries.

New York, Jan. 2.—Blakeslee Barnes, a well known real estate operator and a director of the New York Telephone Company, walked out of his home this morning in a dying condition, leaving Mrs. Barnes in bed wondering why he wanted to go out so early. Mr. Barnes was found lying in City Hall Park eight hours later, but he scarcely had been placed in a patrol wagon when he died.

Mrs. Barnes told the police she had no doubt her husband's death was due to injuries he received Friday night when he was struck by a motor car at the corner of Seventy-ninth street and West End avenue. Mr. Barnes was one of the jurors who sat on the case of Dr. Kennedy, who tried for the murder of Dolly Reynolds. He was well known in the business world and had a high reputation as a real estate broker and appraiser.

BOSTON IS AHEAD OF OTHER CITIES, DECLARES PROF. ZUEBLIN.

Sociologist Says Hub Will Eventually Have Public Ownership of Railroad.

CONDEMNS MONEY KINGS

In Lecture Deals Vigorously With Financial Questions and Modern Problems.

To say that "business is business" is the meaningless equivalent to the feminine "because." The more money we get the less do we understand the meaning of the term "business."

Every time you do not buy intelligently and allow yourself to be hoodwinked you are putting a premium on dishonesty.

The money maker, the financier is supreme. His doom is sealed. There is no place for him in the common life.

It is a difficult thing for a wealthy man to come out alone and stand for what he thinks is right.

Here are 4 striking sentences from a lecture on "Business," delivered yesterday in Lodge Hall of Charles Bushlin, former professor of sociology in the University of Chicago. As is usual when Professor Zueblin speaks, his lecture dealt with modern problems, with the trusts and the methods of modern finance, not forgetting the trusts, the tariff, and he question of public utilities and franchises, he made his points tell through the very bluntness of the language he employed.

Defining the "Common Life" as opposed to the "Simple Life," the professor opened his lecture by saying:

"It is a pet American fetish that Americans are practical. We have taken this saying on to heart that we have come to set down money-making as part of the practical order of things, whereas money-making is a purely temporary condition of business.

Only Way to Judge a Man.

"Social service is the only qualification by which a man should be judged. A man must be measured by the service rather than by the personal gain as shown by the riches he has accumulated. Proof for those engaged in business is only found in their own private standpoint, and the standard by which a man should be merged is the service that he has rendered to the commonwealth.

"One of the processes of money making will defeat itself. We have allowed to become established as the chief tenet of money making that the public must be fooled. The money maker will be brought to the bar of justice for his commercial lie, for the function of business is in the service of the consumer.

"Thomas Lawson is not an academic economist, but he has done more than all the economists by showing us the plain facts. Here are people who are trying to make money. They do not counterfeit it, but they can by the simple mechanical process of juggling make fifty millions look as if it could double to one hundred millions when changed to the other. We shall never learn the mystery of how it can be done, but from what Mr. Lawson has told us we know now for certain that it can be done.

Curse of Private Bankers.

We see that without doing a single service individuals can make money out of money. Private bankers and brokers live on this form of juggling and no reasonable argument can be produced that shows they have any real place in the community for the community's good.

"The bankers will have to become government functionaries to give service to the consumer. More progressive countries than ours are curtailing the activities of the banks and we will nationalize them and treat the stock jugglers as we do the common gambler or counterfeiter.

"Business is business" is the general opinion of society quite as much as of businessmen, and anything that brings monetary reward is justified by the masses of people. No other consideration seems to have any place with us, and as an example of how little the consumer is considered when it is a question of the money interests, who should have only the consumers interests at heart, see what a luncheon club in Cambridge was told the other day by the solicitor of a company appearing for the owners of some objectionable bill boards.

"When gullible women said that if the owners persisted in allowing the bill boards to disgrace the thoroughfare they would refuse to purchase any of the articles so advertised, the solicitor had the audacity to tell them that in saying this they were putting themselves in the same position as three citizens of the United States, who had been deprived of the liberty for giving freedom to their opinions against the courts. So vital therefore is the business of making money that the life of the consumer is not taken into consideration at all.

"One of the most striking instances that we have of the inconsiderate designs of men who make money first and think of the means afterwards, is to be found in the attempt now being made to have Dr. Wiley, who brought about the change in our food laws that helps us to get nearly pure food, thrown out of his office. In the attempt on the part of the men who are afraid to stand by the laws of the food laws, the department is assisting. And it looks as if the consumers will receive again a body blow in losing their only friend, one has been fearless in his onslaught against dishonest methods of making money at the expense of the health of the community.

Consumer Pays All Bills.

"The most important of all economic principles is that the consumer pays all bills. He pays the employer and he pays the employees. He is the victim of the employer and the tax payer. As a buyer of a yard of cloth he pays the real employer of the girl who sells it you.

"You as the consumer are responsible for every one who has had anything to do with the production of that cloth. You may not think you are concerned with the conditions that prevail in the case of the young girl who sells it to you over the counter, but you are, and you are concerned in the conditions that affect every person who has had anything to do with that cloth.

"You should see that those who have produced and sold that cloth get good rewards and you should see that you get your money's worth in the article. Every time you allow yourself to be hoodwinked you are setting a premium on dishonesty.

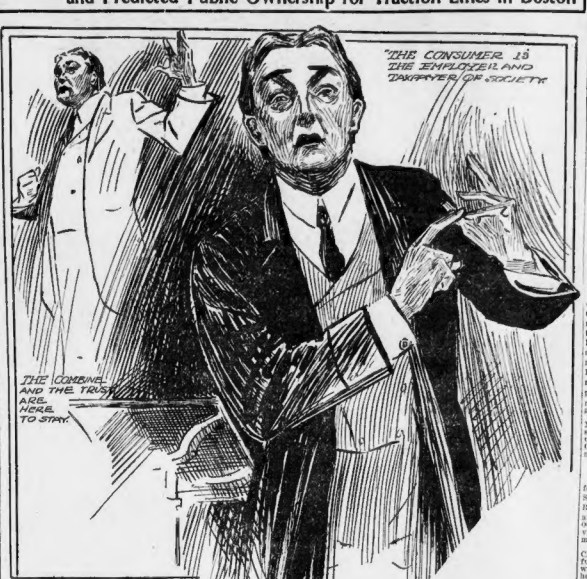
Characteristic Poses of Prof. Zueblin as He Lectured on "Business" and Predicted Public Ownership for Traction Lines in Boston



"In the same way that you are responsible for all of the misdeeds of your children, you are responsible for the misdeeds of dishonest manufacturers, and in punishing them you have to remember at the same time that you have your own short-comings to blame for theirs.

"The man who allows his property to be idle is entitled under our laws to do so and can thank our stupidity in allowing him to sell it finally at a large unearned profit. There are those who say that a special rearrangement of our tax system should allow those who own property in the suburbs and in the city to have two votes. No special rearrangement of tax paying can hold which ignore the fact that every consumer is a tax payer. If taxpayers are to vote every man, woman and child would be a voter.

Trusts and the Tariff.

"Trying to drive out trusts is as stupid as an effort to bring about artificial competition. Looking towards a better condition of affairs from tariff adjustments there is a common error that the stand pattern had us into. This is that the total good of the people is synonymous with the good of every one. A little less prosperity than we have been having is enough to start a cry for a serious consideration of our tariff.

"Those of us who are willing to accept tariff conditions are quick to revolt against the granting of subsidies and yet we have the example of subsidy granting that is beneficial to the community.

"Floating palaces are found on our rivers and lakes in line maintaining our land transportation in every particular. The turbine steamships of today is vastly more ahead of eighteen hour train between New York and Chicago. The former pays a subsidy and therefore does not have to make both ends meet in its business in conserving the public. Such a subsidy does promote a social benefit, but does not warrant subsidies in general.

Public Ownership for Boston.

"Long franchises are granted on the ground that they promote social utilities. In Philadelphia and New York traction companies are able to secure franchises for as long as nine hundred and ninety-nine years. No time seems too long, but the fact is that the best services are given when the franchise is the shortest. Boston, I believe, is much better off than either of these places because the time will eventually come when the full ownership of your traction franchise will return to the people.

"Here in Massachusetts a better condition of affairs would be brought about by a merger of all railway interests under strict regulation, rather than in having the ownership distributed as at the various interests as you do today.

Carnegie a Man of Courage.

"It is a difficult thing for a wealthy man to come out and stand alone for what he thinks is right. Andrew Carnegie is attempting to spend his money wisely and in the evidence that he gave before the ways and means committee of Congress is trying to do right in other ways. Compare, if you would profit by his example, the evasiveness of Rockefeller before this same committee.

"The stewardship of wealth does not rest with the multi-millionaire. We are all tempted to shirk our common duties as to money. But we are the determiners of the economic tendencies of society. We don't understand what wealth is. Wealth is life, and until we know that this is so, and that the gathering of money we will never be able to bring about those conditions in society that we are striving for."

LYNN BOYS' CLUB IS RICHER BY $2,500

Society Dames of North Shore Dance for Its Benefit.

Society matrons and pretty maidens representing the summer set of the North Shore raised over $2,500 at their annual dance for the benefit of the Boys' Club of the Shoe City in Casino Hall on Summer street.

It was one of the largest society gatherings held in years and the proceeds will outstrip all former efforts to make the Boys' Club prosperous.

Both in beauty of costumes and the hall decorations the affair was a brilliant affair. In every way the New Year's ball for sweet charity's sake was a big success.

The club of the Lynn Boys' Club institutions of its kind in the State. It has a commodious home on Lewis street, where boys of all denominations are welcomed in classes and taught useful trades.

Ralph E. Northrup, in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Northrup. In addition to the school of instruction, the club has a splendid gymnasium where the physical side of the boys' training is carried on to good effect. The clubrooms always enjoyed the outrooms of the social set in Lynn and the annual charity ball is the big event of the year.

MISS EMILY BACON MARRIES YALE MAN

Hamilton Fish Benjamin, New York Banker, Weds Lenox Society Favorite.

Lenox, Jan. 2.—Miss Emily Louise Bacon, eldest daughter of Mrs. William B. Bacon of Rockiawn, Lenox, was married at noon to-day in Trinity Church, to Hamilton Fish Benjamin of New York. The ceremony was a simple one because of the recent death of Mrs. Samuel N. Benjamin, the groom's mother. The only attendant of the bride was her sister, Mrs. John C. Greenleaf of New York. The best man was Lieut. Julian A. Benjamin of West Point, the groom's brother.

A large number of friends of the bride filled the nave of the church. The bride entered with her uncle, Dr. Richard C. Greenleaf of Lenox, who gave her in marriage. She wore a beautiful Empire gown of white corded silk, entirely. It was trimmed with old lace, a gift of the bride's mother. Her veil was of sheer tulle. She carried a large bouquet of white Killarney roses. About her neck was a rich pearl necklace, the groom's gift.

Rev. Carl Otto Arnold, acting rector of Trinity Church was the officiating clergyman.

Mrs. John C. Greenleaf's gown was of soft white silk. She wore a large white green hat, and carried an arm bouquet of pink Killarney roses. Miss Bacon, the bride's mother, wore a gown of black satin with pink trimmings. She is one of Yale bride's grandmother, Mrs. M. L. Stone, was present.

The bride is a great favorite in Lenox social life. She is considered one of the handsomest young women in the Lenox set and is very fond of out of door life. Walking is her chief recreation.

Mr. Benjamin was graduated from Yale Sheffild school in the class of 1898, and is a banker. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin departed this afternoon for a wedding trip in the South. They are to live at No. 901 Lexington Avenue.

ALARMED BY PROPHETESS, ESTABLISH FIRE GUARD

Salisbury Residents Will Man Beach Apparatus.

Salisbury, Jan. 2.—Residents of Salisbury Beach, aroused by the two recent disastrous fires that swept the north part of the South End, and disturbed by the sayings of a shore prophetess, who predicts that the whole North End will shortly be devastated by fire, have organized a fire department and will man apparatus to be supplied by the town. Permanent quarters will be secured in the center of the beach. Officers of the department are: Captain, George D. Paul; first lieutenant, Harry Nichols; second lieutenant, Willard Fowler; clerk, John T. Fitzgerald; treasurer, Fred H. Andrews; trustees, William Charland, J. J. Burns and W. Randall. Insurance companies have become so disturbed over the recent fires that risks generally on beach bottle and cottages have been cancelled.

DEMAND BETTER GAS AND A LOWER RATE

Charlestown Consumers Are Making Earnest Fight for Redress.

The fight for 80-cent gas in Charlestown is making good headway. Consumers in the Bunker Hill section are determined to have it and also say that the quality of gas furnished at present should be improved.

The leader of the Charlestown movement is J. A. Dolf, a wholesale and retail tobacco dealer at No. 188 Main street. Associated with him in the crusade is Daniel A. McVarnish, president of the McVarnish Company of No. 158 Main street.

Mr. Dolf and Mr. McVarnish have charge of the petition to the Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners. It is identically the same one circulated by the citizens of Charlestown some time ago, but a big mass meeting held in that district soon. The petition is being very busily signed.

Mr. Dolf said, "Charlestown is part of Boston and we have to pay $1 for gas and the other sections get it for 80 cents. As a matter of fact, the rate of all Boston ought to be 50 cents. That would give the gas company plenty of profit. As far as quality is concerned the gas served to Charlestown is the worst I have ever seen. The quality is bad and the price is high. The petition we are circulating is being signed by hundreds. We will make a showing before the gas commissioners which I think will result in a reduction in the price.

E. L. Lawler, of the firm of Lawler Brothers, contractors and builders, at No. 92 Mt. Vernon street, Charlestown, said: "The quality of the gas given in Charlestown is the poorest I have ever seen. The light we get is horrible. I see no reason why we should not have 80-cent gas in Charlestown as well as the residents of Boston. The gas company has come for a reduction in the price and for improvement in quality."

S. R. Williams, proprietor of the half-dressing establishment at No. 2, Cordis street, Charlestown, said:

"I don't see why we should not have 80-cent gas in Charlestown as well as the consumers in Boston. I use a great deal of gas and find the quality poor."

J. D. Mussin of No. 67 Main street, Charlestown, said:

"The charge of one dollar for 1,000 cubic feet of gas made by the Charlestown Gas Company is exorbitant. Added to this the quality is poor compared with the Boston gas for 80 cents a thousand. In Boston the company is evidently making money at the reduced price."

KIGGER IS KILLED BY FALL FROM MAST

Fatality to East Boston Man While Working in Chelsea.

Ammerson was thirty-four years of age, a sailor by occupation, and only yesterday began work for Boston riggers company. His fellow workmen are at a loss to account for his fall. Almost every bone in his body was broken.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright Are Greeted by Numerous Friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wright of No. 329 Pleasant street, Malden, observed the 65th anniversary of their wedding at their home last evening entertaining about 75 guests from nearby cities and towns. Mr. and Mrs. Wright were married in Boston in 1844 by "Old Father Streeter," the marrying parson of his time, who is said to have married five times as many couples as any other minister. Mrs. Wright is now 84 years of age, having married when she was fourteen. Her husband is three years her senior.

BYRON CHANDLER TELLS LOVE FOR GRACE LA RUE.

Boston Millionaire Bares Heart Secrets In Modern Soul-Mating Tale.

STAR WEDDED TO ART

Come My Arab Lady,
Where the palms are shady,
Hasten to my side.
While the stars are beaming
And the sands are gleaming,
Swiftly we will ride.
"Tom and I, dear only,
Will not find it lonely,
Happy we will be
In the desert life so free,
In no tent we'll dwell;
By our camel's bells.
From Grace LaRue's favorite song (My Arab Lady.)

Chicago, Jan. 2.—This is the love story of a millionaire. It is the really and truly tale of a modern soul mating with trimmings of higher philosophy and quotations from Omar Khayyam. It explains why Byron D. Chandler of Boston, New York and Manchester, N. H., millionaire clubman and bon vivant is not the husband of Grace La Rue, the sinuous and soulful actress though they are rumored as occupying the same suite at the Auditorium annex, and breakfast, lunch and dine together in families.

The announcement is now made by both Mr. Chandler and Miss LaRue that they are not married and Mr. Chandler, who still clings to the husband of Miss Grace Stocker of New York, whom he married in 1905, tells why.

Miss LaRue Will Not Wed.

"The young man who was recently sued for $100,000 for breach of promise by John Sawyer, and before that by Mrs. Edith Roberts of Manchester, N. H., for alienating her affections to the tune of $20,000 posed fondly into the eyes of his fair vis-a-vis as he talked and she smiled mournfully in confirmation of the story.

"I love Grace La Rue," said Mr. Chandler as he poised a soup spoon gracefully in the middle distance, "I love her fully in the middle distance. I have loved her since—since last September."

"But Miss La Rue will not marry," persisted the young millionaire. She has her career to think of. She cannot be blamed if I suppose, she attained some distinction. Money is not her God. Art is. She has set a mark for herself. She will strive until she has entertained her ambition. And that is—"

Marriage a Problem.

"To be at the head of her own company—to fight her way to the top, to achieve fame and prominence."

"Of course, but with a million to back her, why—"

"My dear man," said Mr. Chandler, "can't you see it? What would it be? Not a talented position. Why, this little girl has pulled herself up from nowhere by her—by art."

"Byron" gasped Miss La Rue apprehensively, "you have finished Chandler."

"The stage is a most exacting career," declared the star, "more scientifically nibbling at a fragment of red snapper. Marriage, sometimes, is a failure, but it is a deep inscrutable problem. Love is blind. Many women think that a man sometimes hesitates on the brink of a chasm that is so wide it will turn, do hard to climb out on."

"So we are not married," said Mr. Chandler, sadly. "We are desperately in love, but single. We are like Venus, I am her satellite. Where she goes I follow. Perhaps I may be for the next day I am going to New York."

Mr. and Mrs. McVarnish have charge of the impending separation.

Then he took a stalk of celery and ate it absently until the course was changed.

It is only fair to Mr. Chandler to state that the suit for breach of promise brought against him by Mrs. Edith Roberts of Manchester, N. H., was dismissed in the demands of Mrs. Edith Roberts were never met. This is the first time he has ever told the reality, truly inside facts of "a millionaire's love story."

EMMA MILLETT, WHO DECLARES SHE WAS DRIVEN FROM HOME

CUPID GOOD DOCTOR FOR SICK BED BRIDE

Cupid is playing the double role of mender of hearts and health in the case of Miss Gladys Willigar, whose romantic marriage to Caleb W. Long took place Christmas day in a Brookline hospital. Ever since her wedding day, the young bride has improved in health. She is now up and around the hospital, and will go home to her young and devoted husband to-morrow.

Mindful of the old superstition that postponement of a marriage means future unhappiness, Miss Willigar, a pretty telephone operator, gave up visions of a regulation wedding and went through the marriage ceremony propped in bed.

The wedding was to have been a simple one and preparations had all been made, when Miss Willigar was taken seriously ill and removed to a hospital on Pond avenue for treatment. The young people decided to have the ceremony take place at the hospital. Rev. William Wallace of the Brookline Presbyterian Church officiated.

Mrs. Long is one of the prettiest girls in Brookline. She has a wealth of golden hair. Mr. Long resides at No. 11 Holden street and is employed in Boston.

DISMISSES LILLEY CHARGES; ACT UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Case Against Connecticut Governor-Elect Thrown Out of Court.

New Haven, Jan. 2.—The case brought against Governor-elect George L. Lilley, under the corrupt practices act, by George L. Fox of this city, before two judges, who heard the evidence on motion, was dismissed to-day. The act is declared to be unconstitutional in that it contravenes the State constitution.

The defendant was Henry W. Jessop of New York and Matthew E. Reynolds of this city, counsel for Mr. Fox, was overruled and the plea of abatement made by Mr. Lilley's counsel sustained. The plea of statement set up that, as Mr. Lilley, if found guilty of corrupt practices in the last election, could be disfranchised by the finding of the judges, a proceeding which would be contrary to the constitution, which provides that a man can be deprived of his rights only after trial before a jury. The judges, in dismissing Mr. Fox's complaint, hold that the right of jury trial is involved under the State constitution.

Mr. Fox's attorneys gave notice of an appeal to the supreme court of errors. The four ground of the appeal is not stated.

BARRED FROM HOME SAYS GIRL WITNESS AGAINST FATHER.

Emma Victoria Millett of Revere Now Under the Care of Neighbor.

SON GIVEN TO SOCIETY

Declaring that she had been driven from home because she testified against her father and in behalf of her younger brother in the Probate Court, eighteen-year-old Emma Victoria Millett of Revere is now sheltered at the home of Mrs. Olive Sheppard of the same town.

Miss Millett says her father ordered her from the house, telling her he would "have no talebearers."

Mrs. Sheppard has secured a revolver which she keeps handy in the house against cruelty to Children.

William Millett was officially turned over to Agent Charles O. Currier of the society and was at once committed to the Westboro Insane Asylum, to which he was committed a few months ago by his father, William Millett, Sr., a real estate dealer of Boston, living at No. 73 Pierce street, Revere.

Daughter a Witness.

It came about through the struggles of many neighbors, one of whom, Mrs. Sheppar, a property owner at No. 190 Ocean avenue, Revere, secured the aid as guardian for the boy and his oldest sister, who had asked protection from the father. She said the mother of the children died recently in Boston.

The matter was called to the attention of Attorney Henry C. Long, when the case came up for a hearing Friday a large array of witnesses were present against the elder Mr. Millett, including his oldest daughter, Emma.

William Millett, Sr. made no contest in the Probate Court.

Mr. Long represented that the housekeeper, Miss Kate Kinloch, of England, was not agreeable to the Millett children and that the father lived with the housekeeper always and against the children. He offered to substantiate by witnesses the allegation that the father had threatened to have all of his children "sent away."

Miss Emma Victoria Millett stated that because she was present to testify against her father he had ordered her out of the house.

She worked and gave father the money always," she said yesterday. "I would bring my money home and he would have it work, hungry and tired.

"It was not very pleasant at home."

Warned of Spies.

"Last night I came home with Mrs. Sheppard and to-day we were warned by letter that there would be a bomb placed in the house this evening. I am afraid and I shall ask Mrs. Sheppard to allow me to go to the Home for protection."

Mrs. Sheppard received the letter this morning me to be careful, for the house was being watched by spies. "Emma Victoria was not safe," said Mrs. Sheppard.

"What did I do? I presented a big bull-dog revolver which I keep right in the front room with the door locked."

COLLECTIONS TAKEN IN LOCAL CHURCHES TODAY

Most of the Protestant churches in Greater Boston will to-day make donations to the general Italian relief fund. Bishop John Van Nostrand of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Rev. John Galbraith, presiding elder of the Boston district, decided to issue a letter containing the appeal. Rev. Dr. Charles Clark, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy.

Bishop William Lawrence of the Protestant Episcopal Church, says that the different churches of his diocese will make such a action to-day as they individually see fit.

WILL STRICKEN MESSINA RISE ONCE MORE FROM RUINS?

What does the future hold for Messina, cruelly stricken, yet even in its crumbled, powdered ruins said to be attractive? Will the men who for thirty centuries have been lured to this wonderfully beautiful spot, so forbidden of the gods, at last take heed and fly their wrath?

And what a vengeance the Fates have taken!

Yet Messina, swept time after time by plague, and in 1783 reduced to dust and its people slaughtered by thousands, has ever risen to a greater splendor. But will the death of most of its 150,000 inhabitants, their sudden annihilation, not to speak of the millions of values in property of every kind sacrificed, not deter? Time will tell.

Never on this planet was there a fairer picture than of this magnificently located city, the day before the terrible earthquake. Extending two miles along its beautiful bay, on a perfect harbor with a mirror-like surface and very great depth, and half a mile up the terrace mountain slopes, it had a commanding view of the Sicilian strait and Italian main land and mountains that were exceedingly pretty and drew many tourists.

Wall Screens Devastation.

Messina, under the name of Zancle, was founded 1004 B.C. Zancle is Greek for sickle, the shape of which the harbor, making a sweeping circuit of four miles, takes.

Situated about 200 miles southeast of Naples it has always been a waiting fortress of the first class. Its harbor is one of the best on the Mediterranean and whole fleets can anchor there.

Approaching the city from the strait the view was extremely beautiful, as the water front was almost classic in its development in white marble. Singularly enough, most of these facades still remain as though left as a screen to their work of destruction beyond.

The dark green of the orange, lemon and olive groves climbing the mountain slopes made a pretty contrast to the red tiled roofs and gleaming marble.

The streets were well laid out and paved with lava. This heavy material was also used very largely in building and it was to its great weight that vast numbers of fatalities in the crash were due.

The Marina, a promenade fronting the harbor, adorned with statues to the masters of several centuries, was one of the finest drives in Europe. Immediately behind the Marina was a magnificent terrace over lined with noble edifices, but the comparatively small number which survived the earthquake of 1783 are now in utter ruins.

Warned by Rumbling.

As in 1783 there were rumblings and warnings for at least three years before the present cataclysm. But now, as then, men refused to be warned. They had all their fortunes there and it was impossible to leave, they thought. But most of them have left now. They had to go despite their tenacious adherence to their native soil and fortunes. But they literally took Messina and all which made it so attractive to them, with them.

Where will the people left in Reggio and Messina an utter province of the latter name, some 50,000 alone, go should they after all the centuries lose fear? It is certain large numbers of them will emigrate.

Warned by the experience of the past, most of the Messina structures were but two stories high. If the city is ever rebuilt it will probably be on the Japanese plan, constructed of light material, built to resist earthquakes. For steel, which is fireproof, durable, and light, out of the reach of this impoverished people.

Messina and Reggio are both on the border line of the seismic boundary which separates the primary and secondary formations between Mt. Aetna and Mt. Vesuvius. No cities on earth are more perilously located. They are on the edge of a great, crumbling chasm. This chasm is none the less real because it is under ground, only a sheet of the earth's crust hides it from view, and the most ordinary seismic shake heaves. It has been likened to an exposed nerve in a tooth.

Among the buildings raised were the massive, beautiful Gothic cathedral, built by the Normans after their conquest of Sicily and the palace of the viceroy, which was surrounded by magnificent gardens. There were also the archbishop's palace, the senate house, custom house, stock and fruit exchanges, banks, a fine hospital, many convents and monasteries. The university was also destroyed.

There is a great fear that some of the priceless Greek manuscripts in the university have been destroyed by fire if indeed they were not lost in the destruction of the buildings by the earthquake itself.

For centuries Messina's silks and satins have had great fame. In modern time the city has been known for its great exports of citrus fruits, chiefly lemons. It was the centre of the world's lemon market, although in the last ten years Californian and Cuban crops have been in active competition. It also had valuable fisheries.

The Messinians took the city in 500 B. C. and gave its present name to it. Charles of Anjou lost most of his fleet in attacking the town, and in 1674 a Spanish fleet having blockaded the port was defeated after a great battle in the harbor by the French.

The plague killed half of its people in 1743, and just forty years later the earthquakes razed the city and killed an equal number.

City May Rise Again.

But through all the city remained, and time and time it has been rebuilt and the people have clung to it with passionate devotion.

Well may men, after thirty centuries, ask what reason there is to suppose that this one old city with its location on a great channel of trade and with the great advantages given by its harbor and the plantations around—for many of them have not been destroyed—will not arise greater and finer than ever? Men have lived for ages in earthquaked countries, but unlike the ostriches they usually build their structures to meet such conditions. The question now may be, in what form, if Messina rise, will she garb herself?

SPECTRE OF DEATH IN CITY STREETS

A constant spectacle that makes me and are the swarms of hungry, crying children, vainly seeking their parents. There is nothing more pathetic than this. I scarcely reached the centre of Palmi when I turned to and helped the soldiers extricate two children from a wrecked house. My first impression of the results of the catastrophe is the extraordinary apathy of the survivors. Literally they are so dazed by the tragedy that they are not making any attempt to assist the rescuers.

I pushed on from Palmi to Bagnara and was able to direct the organization of the first relief train from Palmi. In Bagnara 900 dead remain under the debris. The surviving population is famishing. No succor has so far reached Bagnara.

No Food For Famishing.

Thursday night two sharp earthquake shocks completed the wreck caused by the first titanic shock.

I started on foot for Reggio, fifteen miles away, tramping with the troops. The most distressing feature of the disaster is the appalling disorganization of the rescue work throughout Calabria. Friday night not a single morsel of food had arrived to relieve the famishing, despite the fact that it had been four days since the earthquake.

The spectacle in Bagnara horrified me. The stench from the piles of unburied bodies is fearful. Pestilence is inevitable unless sufficient help arrives immediately to bury these awful spectres.

The survivors in Bagnara attempted to seize food, but the military resisted them. After walking three miles from Bagnara, I entered the village of Catarello and, after the same distressing incidents, the same shocking spectacle, was duplicated. At Favazina I found a boat to take me as far as Scylla.

After what I've already seen I can sincerely exclaim, 'Merciful God, what horrors!'

Hundreds of bodies lie in the wreck strewn roads. I reached the hamlet of Canetello, where I found 100 stupified peasants, all that is left out of 3,000 inhabitants.

The King landed this morning and promised to dispatch assistance, but none came.

When I arrived at Scylla I was literally raised. Rescuing the village of Sant Giovanni, I found English sailors from the warship Exmouth, whose captain merits praise for having established the first effective hospital in all the stricken region. The Exmouth's doctor, Bertram, was assisted by Engineer Ranier in attending the wounded. The hospital was improvised in railroad arches. Half of San Giovanni's population of 1,000 was killed. Here, at Scylla, above all, Palmi, the atmosphere reeks with staggering odors.

It seems an absurdity to attempt to describe conditions in Reggio. Despite the lapse of four days, literally nothing has been done to relieve the survivors. Reggio seems to have been forgotten. A sane human being in Reggio is a rarity. Crowds of people frantically searching for food in the half ruined stores, risking their lives.

Yesterday soldiers were constrained to fire on a group of thieves, looting a pension. Otherwise the troops seem to have received no orders to use their rifles except to shoot dogs and hogs found making grim meals.

It is pathetic to see the survivors clustered stupefied, sitting at the ruins of their homes. Always there is the wailing of hungry children vainly seeking their parents. Reggio suffered two scourges. The first was destroying the lower portion of the town and the earthquake ruined the higher parts.

I do not care to criticise the authorities. I merely state that the most lamentable failure of the disaster is the fact that after four days absolutely nothing has been done to remedy the appalling miseries of the survivors. Already troops landed in the ruined towns are beginning to suffer from hunger, having brought insufficient rations for the first few days' needs. The urgent necessities of the moment are simply these: Lots of corn for the dead, immediate succor for the wounded and food for the survivors.

Massachusetts Cables 250,000 Lire Fund to Italian Red Cross

The remittance went to-day by cable from Lee, Higginson & Co., State treasurers, to you, through Banca Commerciale Italiana, Rome. Committee desires extend on behalf citizens of Massachusetts most profound sympathy.

JAMES J. STORROW, Chairman.

Send Supply Ships.

From the conferences with Secretary Newberry and Assistant Secretary Bacon the President learned that the supply ship Culgoa, loaded down with supplies for the battleship ship fleet, is now at Port Said. This is about 1,000 miles from the scene of the disaster. It is thought the supply ship Celtic sailed from New York a few days ago.

The President will urge that these ships be sent to Italy, with their supplies, and turn the food over to the stricken people. This would be better than actual cash, which could not be used to advantage as supplies can be supplied on the way. The value of the supplies aboard both ships is believed to be in the neighborhood of $400,000.

The battleship fleet will arrive at Italian ports in eight or ten days, and their large supplies of medical articles can be used to good advantage. They will undoubtedly be directed to give all the aid possible from their medical stores.

Telegram of Thanks.

The President to-day made public the following telegram, received from the President of the Italian Central Relief Society:

To the President:

"The Italian Central Relief Committee is deeply touched by the spontaneous and generous manifestation of sympathy and human solidarity shown by the great American people in the appalling catastrophe which has overtaken Ital, interpreting the sentiments of all Italians. Tender to you and through you to the American nation the expression of their everlasting gratitude.

(Signed) "MASNIGLIA, President."

Meanwhile the Red Cross organization is continuing to send money for the sufferers' relief, and it was announced that $100,000 was forwarded by the Italian Red Cross. Five thousand dollars additional came from the New York Red Cross to-day. Up to to-day, while notice from the California organization was that $10,000 was on hand.

ITALY TO ABATE TAXES TO CHECK RUSH FROM SICILY

Chicago, Jan. 2.—The Italian consul here, Guido Rabetto is authority for the statement that his government is alarmed at the prospects of loss of thousands of residents of the volcano zone. These inhabitants will flee to other countries in Europe and to America. Already cities of Italy are besieged with applications of their relatives for information concerning them. Prosperous Italian-Americans are furnishing funds to pay for the passage of relatives in the districts threatened by Vesuvius and Stromboli.

Consul Sabetto is advising the former residents of Italy to remain where they are, impoverished relatives from coming to America. The government will devise ways which shows the advantage to be offered by Italian governments to make settlement of Southern Italy especially desirable.

Calabria, Puglia, Sicily and the volcanic islands are to be exempted from the payment of taxation.

Millions will be spent for harbor improvements. The government will devote as much money as possible to build roads, rebuild public structures and improve the architecture of the menaced section.

The Lipari islands will be included in these concessions. With immunity from

CATHOLICS SWELL RELIEF FUND TO-DAY

From long before daybreak this morning until 9 o'clock it bids fair to be a day of "Sweet Charity" will be outstretched and warmly grasped in the crowded pews of Boston's Catholic churches.

At the request of Archbishop O'Connell, the priests of every parish will ask their congregations at all the services, from the first mass at 6 o'clock until the high mass at half-past 10, to subscribe for the relief of the earthquake sufferers.

The first answer to the archbishop's appeal was received early there has already Mass said by Fr. P. J. Lyons at 5:30 p. m.

The dimes and the nickels of the poor, as well as the dollars of the rich, are welcomed in answer to the appeal of the archbishop to the children of the church. The response is already in full swing and is unprecedented. It will be, as Archbishop O'Connell says in his letter, the largest ever, been, prompt and generous."

This is the strongest appeal for charitable aid that has ever been issued for any outside purpose by the authority of the Catholic Church in Boston. It is not only backed by the authority of the official head of the archdiocese, but it is supported by the enthusiasm of the clergy in America. James Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, who has said his letter to pastors:

"This is not the time for mere sentimental signs of pity. It is the hour of need, and true sympathy demands that we do all in our power to bring immediate relief to the sufferers. The practical way in which we can help is by sending money for the purchase of clothing, food and medicine. We appeal, therefore, to generous hearts, and feel confident that our appeal will be abundantly answered."

As is well known, the great majority of the Catholic people of Boston are of Irish race. This fact will be a strong factor in the church collections to-day, for the sons of Sun-Kissed, Italy, there has always existed the strongest ties of kinship.

The greatest Irishman of the 19th century—Daniel O'Connell—died on Italian soil. As the illustrious emancipator of his race and faith breathed his last at Genoa, he bequeathed "his soul to heaven, his body to Ireland and his heart to Rome." Irish Catholics will not fail to recall that fact to-day. This fact will be a strong factor in the church collections to-day, for the sons of Sun-Kissed, Italy, there has always existed the strongest ties of kinship.

Throughout such as these will fill the minds of the Catholics of Boston when they hear their archbishop's letter read in them this morning and their answer will be generous and general.

The money subscribed this morning for the earthquake fund will be forwarded by the different pastors to the treasurer of the New, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Splaine, D. D., chancellor of the archdiocese, No. 78 Union Park street.

CONGRESS TO VOTE $500,000 TO RELIEF

Washington, D. C., Jan. 2.—Congress will appropriate $500,000 for the relief of the sufferers in Italy Monday next. Immediately after convening at noon, both houses will receive a special message from the President recommending the granting of this sum. As soon as the message is submitted it will be formally referred by each house to its committee on appropriations.

There will be no delay in reporting the measure back. The two bodies will vie with each other in its speedy passage. This program already has been arranged between the President, Senator Hale, chairman of the Senate committee on appropriations and Speaker Cannon of the House of Representatives.

The sum to be appropriated will cover the value of supplies already forwarded to the sufferers on the order of the President. The appropriations will be by far than have been made in the past for a similar purpose, the largest grant heretofore made was that of $200,000 to Martinique.

The President conferred for some last night with Senator Hale, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations as to the course of action to take. This morning he talked the matter over with Assistant Secretary Bacon of the State Department, who, being in possession of dispatches from American diplomatic agents, would best know the sentiment of our representatives as to the form governmental aid should take.

PRESIDENT URGES ON RELIEF WORK

Washington, Jan. 2.—The President sent the following message to Hon. Patrick F. McGowan, who presided at the monster mass meeting of the American-Italian general relief committee at Madison Square Garden, New York city, to-night:

Washington, Jan. 2, 1909.

Hon. Patrick F. McGowan,

Chairman American-Italian General Relief Committee, New York.

I earnestly wish success to the American-Italian General Relief Committee in its great mass meeting at Madison Square Garden. It is, of course, not possible for me to attend in person. I am doing everything that can be done to get aid to the sufferers, and on account of the extreme urgency of the case have sent two supply ships with $300,000 worth of food and provisions without waiting for the authority of Congress, being confident that Congress will approve of my action. I shall also ask Congress for additional aid throughout the coming week when the relief work is in full swing, and through the State Department with Italy, so that everything possible shall be done by the United States that may be done. Furthermore, I have cabled the Italian government preferring the services of any or all of the battleship fleet if such can be used in this crisis. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

TALKS ON TEETH

By G. Gordon Martin, D.D.S.

"A Clean Mouth"

President Roosevelt regards the proper care of the Teeth as of utmost importance. "The Roosevelt never neglect their teeth," says Mr. Anthony Black in a recent magazine article.

Mr. Roosevelt himself says: "A clean mouth means a clean stomach, a clean stomach a clean brain, a clean brain a well body."

In other words, good, sound teeth, well cared for, mean good health—and this is true. The teeth should be thoroughly and vigorously brushed several times a day and always at night before retiring. Brush up and down as well as across the teeth—brush hard. Then cleanse the mouth with some simple antiseptic wash.

But even with the best of care teeth will decay and become diseased. You cannot have a clean mouth with even one unfilled cavity or with loosened, diseased or missing teeth. Then the condition of your mouth (that is, your teeth) will quickly affect your general health. Delay is dangerous. With the first indication of tooth trouble you should consult a skilled dentist.

The success and high reputation of G. Gordon Martin, Inc., is founded on our practice of Dentistry by Specialists. No single practitioner can possibly be equally expert in all lines of dental work. All our operators are registered dentists of special skill and experience. We place your case in the hands of the man best adapted to handle it and you get the benefit of his expert knowledge.

In this way we give the best possible service and comfort to those who require dental work. A patient who places his case in our hands is certain of having the work well done at the beginning. It will last longer and give him more satisfaction than ordinary dentistry. When the work is finished he or she will have a clean mouth—dentally and scientifically clean.

The Alveolar Method of dentistry is our most important specialty. By this method we restore diseased or missing teeth without resorting to partial plates or ordinary bridge work. This is a great advantage, as naturally no one wishes to wear a plate, and ordinary bridge work is a clumsy makeshift at best.

Even when only two sound teeth are left in either jaw the Alveolar Method restores the complete set without plates. Also we tighten loose teeth and make them firm and solid in their sockets.

Alveolar Dentistry does not require a surgical operation. There is no cutting or boring into the gums—and therefore very little if any pain.

Special Notice—Hundreds of satisfied patients give us permission to refer to them. Write us today for the names of those living in your community who have had our work. Investigate for yourself. Seeing is believing.

A copy of our Free Illustrated Book on Alveolar Dentistry sent to any address on request.

Caution—We have no other office in New England.

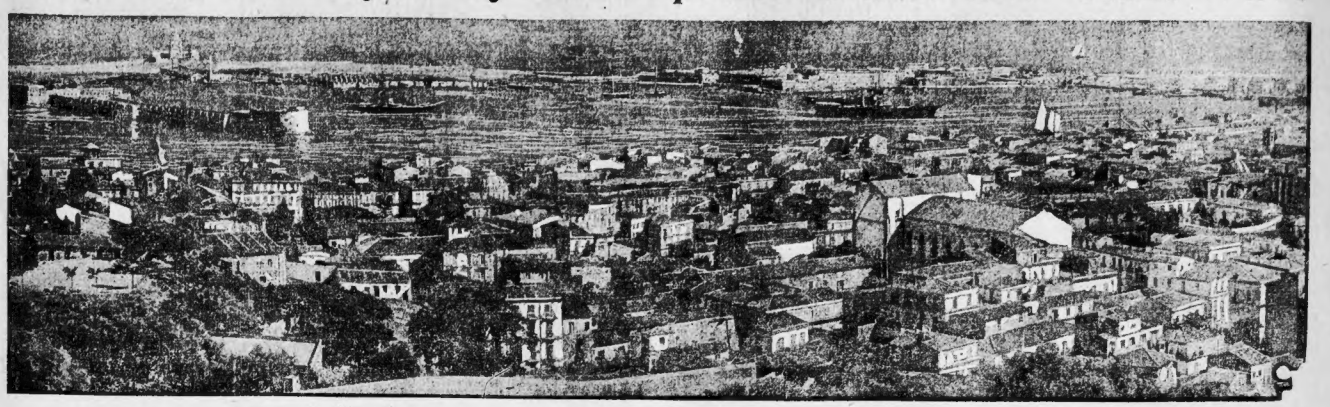
Beautiful, Destroyed by Earthquake Shock and Tidal Wave



SOCCORSO ALLE VITTIME.

Il Salvataggio Procede Regolarmente.

A tanto caos che regnava sovrano fin da quando avvenne il terribile cataclisma nel mezzogiorno d'Italia ora succede un po d'ordine, per i provvedimenti energici del governo. Le truppa ha gia occupato la zona devastata, e subito sono state instituite cucine e forni da campo. Nei paesi limitrofi a quelli dovastati non e possibile ancora stabilire un servizio bene organizzato. Cio che ancora oggi desta sempio di raccapriccio, e il fatto che le squadre di salvataggio estraggono dalle rovine persone ancora in vita.

L'ambasciatore Americano a Roma consiglia di noleggiare telegraficamente dei piroscafi in Europa con medicinali e infermieri, e dopo far trasportare i superstiti lontano dal luogo del disastro. Ancora oggi vi sono migliaia di morenti fra le rovine, e migliaia che mancano di tutto. Non vi e piu posto per i profughi a Palermo, a Catania, e a Siracusa. Essendo Napoli piena di superstiti, quelli che ora arrivarno vengono dirotti a Roma. Il Re ha convertito i suoi palazzi in tanti ospedali.

I forestieri, specialmente gli Americani, a Roma, si distinguono altamente per il loro spirito umanitario. Il signor Nelson Gay di Boston, che occupa un sontuoso appartamento nel palazzo Orsini, ha dato ordine di convertire le sale in magazzinaggio per i viveri destinati alle vittime.

La regina Elena e stata leggermente ferita, e viene fatta segno all'ammirazion ed alle benedizioni di tutto il popolo italiano per la sua opera fra i derelitti.

A Palmi S. A. R. il Duca di Aosta e stato leggermente ferito dalla caduta di un muro.

S. M. il Re continua ancora a organizzare e a sopraintendere ai lavori di salvataggio, e la Regina in tutto cio che essa può. E'impossibile dare un numero definitivo dei morti tuttavia si da' la cifra di 116,000 a Messina, 29,000 a Reggio, fermando, cogli altri morti nelle altre regioni vicine, un totale di 200,000. Tredici americani perirono nel disastro. Il console americano a Palermo, Mr. William Bishop e sano e salvo, e presta l'opera sua nel lavoro di salvataggio. Si suppone che degli americani che si trovavano in Sicilia, al momento del disastro, nessuno sia perito, eccetto il console Arthur S. Cheney e sua moglie. Di tredici americani partiti per la Sicilia poco prima del terremotto, non si ha notizia alcuna.

taxation and the diversion of funds into the devastated region, conditions will be especially attractive to the poor.

The pleasant climate and excellent trading facilities of the fruit country are also pointed out by the council as assuring prosperity. Consul Sabetto says the style of architecture will be changed so buildings will not topple down.

RED CROSS BOXES TO COLLECT QUAKE FUNDS

One cent will pay for one meal for a poor child.

For the convenience of the thousands of persons who will be glad to contribute to the relief of the earthquake sufferers in Italy the Massachusetts Branch of the American Red Cross yesterday sent out 1,000 boxes, which will be placed in conspicuous places in stores, mills, libraries and other places accessible to all.

State Treasurer Gardiner M. Lane, No. 41 State street, this city, will receive the money received daily in Washington, where the National treasurer will once cash ables drafts to the Italian Red Cross through the Department of State.

Every cent given in Boston on one day may in the hands of the Red Cross Relief Committee in Italy in twenty-four or forty-eight hours. In Massachusetts there are four well-arranged divisions, and the money in each is collected by the following division treasurers:

Berkshire County—Dr. Alfreda B. Wish, Ingersoll Street, Pittsfield.

Essex County—W. O. Chapman, Asiatic National Bank, Salem.

Hampden County—Ralph A. Alden, Springfield National Bank, Springfield.

Worcester County—John W. Pearl, Slater building, Worcester.

PRESIDENT CUMMINGS OF A. O. H. CONTRIBUTES $1,000

Matthew Cummings, national president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, on behalf of the national officers of the organization, yesterday contributed $1,000 from the funds of the order for the suffering people of Italy.

President Cummings sent out an appeal to every State and Provincial president of the order in this country and Canada asking that action be speedily taken to raise money for the Italians.

As president of the Hibernians, Mr. Cummings, representing the 200,000 members in the order, sent a telegram of deep sympathy to Monsignor Falconio, papal delegate at Washington. He also sent the archbishop of the donation of $1,000. This money and other subscriptions will be turned over to Archbishop William H. O'Connell, national chaplain, who will forward it to the proper place.

The telegram President Cummings sent to Mgr. Falconio is as follows:

"His Excellency Most Rev. Diomede Falconio, D. D., Apostolic Delegate, Washington:

"I offer in the name of 200,000 members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians our most sincere and heartfelt sympathy to the grief-stricken people of Italy in this terrible affliction. National chaplain forwards $1,000 to relief fund. Appeal sent throughout organization for contributions.

(Signed) "MATTHEW CUMMINGS,

BOSTON MANAGERS UNITE IN THEATRICAL BENEFIT

The theatrical managers of Boston have planned to give a joint Italian Relief Fund benefit in the Colonial and Tremont theatres on Sunday night, January 10. All the receipts are to be turned over to the general fund. It is necessary to give the double benefit because the bill would be so large and attractive that the crowds could not get into any one playhouse.

The sale of seats is to open at the box offices of the Colonial and Tremont theatres Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock. The arrangements were made at a meeting of the Theatre Managers' Association, A. Bonton, at which President John B. Schoeffel presided.

Those who attended included Charles B. Rice, W. D. Andrews, T. B. Lothian, F. D. Smith, A. D. Briffle, R. F. Jagetis, George W. Magee, Ralph Flanders, Harry Farrell and Jay Hunt.

The proposed bills will include all of the operatic, musical and vaudeville stars playing in the different amusement houses in the city then.

SAW PASSENGER TRAIN ENGULFED BY TIDAL SEA

Rome, Jan. 2.—A policeman in one of the villages near Reggio reported today that he saw a passenger train on the coast railway line engulfed as the tidal wave that followed the quake. The train was swept away by the rolling seas. It thought it had been a pike board.

EDMUND BILLINGS, WHO WILL REPRESENT STATE IN RELIEF IN CALABRIA

The situation among the survivors at Palmi is desperate. A small store of provisions remained there this afternoon, but people were so famished that they fought for the loaves of bread that were handed out. Soldiers were forced to use bayonets to insure an equitable distribution.

TOURISTS THOUGHT LOST ARE REPORTED SAFE

Washington, Jan. 2.—The State Department received a cablegram from Consul General Crowninshield at Naples announcing that General Charles Hull, U. S. A., retired, who it was thought might have been lost in the Messina disaster is safe at Naples.

The message also states that the messenger of the American consul at Messina has arrived at Naples wounded. He says that Consul Cheney and Legion and Former Consul Pierce, who had recently been relieved at that post, are dead, and that the secretary of their bodies is impossible.

The State Department is also in receipt of a message from G. W. Bent of Boston, Miss., announcing the safety of Miss Ida Palermo of Stelb Bent, one of the Americans reported who was thought might have been killed at Messina.

A cablegram was received by the department from Ambassador Griscom stating that he had decided to postpone his departure for Sweden until the arrival of the Scorpion from Constantinople as he thought by so doing he could save inconvenience to the Italian Government than by any other possible.

The ambassador stated that he had arranged for safe conduct for a telegram from Cuttina from Rome to Messina at once Minister Griscom is also in touch with Archbishop Falconio, papal delegate at Washington, and the archbishop of the donation of $1,000. This money and other subscriptions will be turned over to Archbishop William H. O'Connell, national chaplain, who will forward it to the proper place.

The telegram President Cummings sent to Mgr. Falconio is as follows:

SISTERS OF TWO BOSTON MEN ARE SAFE IN NAPLES

While hundreds of cablegrams have been sent to Italy by Boston Italians inquiring as to the fate of relatives and friends in the earthquake zone, few answers have been received. According to one of the telegraph companies here, the majority of the cables received from Italy are most reassuring to the anxious Italians.

The following message from Naples was received to-day by Antonio Musolino, a member of the Italian Relief Fund Committee, 8 Berger, Nos. 57 and 59 Fulton street, North End.

"Up till now your two sisters, Angelina and Concetta, and your two children are safe. Will telegraph you immediately when I get more news."

NEW ENGLAND DRY GOODS' ASSOCIATION'S PLAN

The New England Dry Goods Association has taken up the work of raising funds for the Italians in a practical manner. President J. C. B. Smith is at the head of the movement. Last night he issued the following notice of the work to be done. It follows:

"Believing that everybody wishes to contribute to the relief of Italy, the New England Dry Goods Association will station men, with boxes, in front of all the principal dry goods stores in Boston.

"So all you can, and may our Heavenly Father protect Boston as he protected us from our country from such a calamity.

"(Signed) J. C. B. Smith, President."

THOUSANDS OF REFUGEES HOUSED IN THE VATICAN

Rome, Jan. 2.—Five thousand injured sufferers from the earthquake region are now housed in the Vatican and other temporary places of refuge.

The Pope himself is caring for 1,000 at his own expense, while the citizens are looking after the remainder.

The news from the stricken regions is of the most meagre character, the government monopolizing all sources of communication in order to obtain quick and speedy relief for the victims who are still in the devastated regions. Late to-night Dr. Francis Metcalfe, the American physician, with an organized corps of Red Cross nurses, left for Messina to aid in the care of the sick and wounded.

FEARS WIFE AND HIS FIVE CHILDREN ARE VICTIMS

Ricevio Pierotto of 42 Tiverton street, this city, fears that his wife, Rosaria and his five children, who were located in the northern section of destroyed Messina, have perished. She returned to Italy to recover her health last April.

Last week she sent a letter to her husband telling him that she would return to Boston on the White Star Liner Creete, sailing from Naples on Jan. 5. Pierotto, that she had not left Messina when the great calamity came and wiped out the city.

MASSACHUSETTS TOWNS START FUNDS FOR SICILY

Massachusetts towns and cities are responding to the appeal for funds for the Italian sufferers. Ne Bedford citizens have given $500. Mayor Clifford M. Brewer of Medford has called for subscriptions to be left at the Mayor's office.

Winthrop I. Nottage is to act as treasurer.

Mayor George A. Richards of Malden has appointed Frank H. Slocum treasurer of the relief fund being raised in that city. In Newton Mayor Edmund Johnson has named a committee of Aldermen to take the relief matter in hand. Newton churches to-day will make contributions. In Lowell $1,281.80 has been raised and Mayor Farnham is pressing prompt donations.

BILLINGS STARTS FOR ITALY TUESDAY

Secretary of G. G. A. to Direct Disbursement of Boston Funds for Quake Victims.

Intent on reaching as quickly as possible the devastated provinces in Italy, Edmund Billings of this city will leave Boston to-morrow night for New York, and from there will sail Tuesday morning for Italy as Massachusetts representative in the work of relief and as a member by authority of the State Department at Washington of the relief force connected with the United States Consulate at Rome.

He is the first agent sent by any relief body in America to represent it at the scene of the recent earthquake and its disaster. Mr. Billings is chairman of the Massachusetts Italian Relief Fund Committee, secretary of the Good Government Association and the man who had immediate charge of the relief work for sufferers in the Chelsea conflagration.

Mr. Billings began at once to prepare for his departure for Italy this morning, and the best part of to-morrow discussing with his associates on the Massachusetts Relief Committee plans for his work in the region affected.

"My efforts in Italy will be directed especially towards affording relief to Americans who suffered in the earthquake, Mr. Billings said last night. "The Massachusetts committee desires this. I will also investigate inquiries the Massachusetts citizens of Italian blood concerning relatives and friends in the stricken district.

"Already there have been hundreds of such inquiries. I trust that I may find a way to answer all of them while in the scene of the disaster. Cable despatches from the other side indicate that in many it will be many days before the full extent of the disaster is known. I hope to reach there in time to help unravel some of the tangle which has been kept persons in Massachusetts in ignorance of the fate of friends.

"To-morrow and Monday I will spend with the other members of the committee arranging details of plan of work as well as it may be mapped out so far from what is known. Tuesday night I will go to New York. Tuesday morning I will sail from there for Italy on the steamer Wilhelm der Grosse. I will go directly to Rome, present my credentials from the Massachusetts committee and from the State Department at Washington, and proceed to Messina and the other stricken cities.

"I do not plan to establish any special bureau, but will work with the official of the Italian Red Cross Society."

RUSHED FROM HOMES TO DIE IN FLAMES AND SEA

London, Jan. 2.—Harrowing details of the terrible sufferings of the victims of the Calabrian earthquake at the time of the wedding the earthquake, the subsequent flames and tidal wave are added to-day by two refugees from Messina.

"I saw the houses fall one after another as if they were cards," said one. "I was rushed from their ruined homes and ran to the street just in time to escape death to the Madonna.

"Those who escaped death by the tumbling of their houses were soon knocked down by the falling walls which had withstood the first shock.

"It was awful. The people rushed wildly about, their clothes in flames, seeking some way to turn to escape. Then the flames broke out and those who had not been killed by the falling walls were burned to death. I had my hand scorched, and heard the awful crackling of the flames could be heard. The screaming of the people was appalling.

"Saved from death under falling debris, hundreds were carried to the sea to escape the flames and fairly burned alive.

"I was saved, but I know that he had not yet received the names of any American killed in the disaster.

The Navy Department, this afternoon, sent orders to accompany Tennessee to the United States Gunboat Scorpion, to proceed from Constantinople direct to Messina.

ITALIAN COMMITTEE TO MAKE CANVASS OF CITY

The Italian Relief Committee of New England, composed entirely of Boston and New England Italians, with headquarters at No. 178 North street, to-day sent out letters to make a house-to-house canvass of Boston for relief funds. The canvass is to be conducted in other Massachusetts and New England towns and cities.

The committee to-day sent $700 to Lee Higginson & Company and by noon to-day had raised $500 additional, which makes a total of $1,800 raised so far for the relief fund.

That no one can be imposed upon, the following are given credentials by the committee:

"This is to certify that the bearer, Mr. ..... is a member of the Italian Relief Committee of New England for the sufferers in the earthquake in Italy. We duly authorize him to collect any contributions.

(Signed)
"CAVALIER G. TOMASELLO, President.
"J. A. PISTORINO, Secretary-Treasurer."

On Tuesday night from 7 to 10 every presidents of Italian societies in Boston and North End, representing some 6,000 members, are to meet at the headquarters of the Italian Relief Committee of New England, No. 178 North street, to discuss ways and means of raising still more funds for their stricken brethren in Italy, and such other steps as may then be thought necessary.

OFFER PONTIFICAL MASS TO-MORROW

A pontifical mass of requiem will be offered at 9 a. m. tomorrow at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross for the repose of the souls of those who perished in the Italian earthquake and tidal wave.

Archbishop O'Connell will be the officiating pontiff and many clergy will be present in the sanctuary.

There will be requiem services Monday morning also in the Catholic churches of the North End, where the parish priests of the Italians of Boston make their homes.

The Franciscan fathers of St. Leonard's church on North Bennet street, the Jesuit Italian church in Boston, are arranging for a requiem service to be held on Jan. 13.

Under the liturgical rules of the church, unless a special dispensation be granted, no funeral shall occur between the days of Christmas and January 13, except in the presence of the body, which cannot be obtained.

The requiem mass to be held at St. Leonard's will take the form of a public memorial service, at which the clergy, civil and delegations from the Italian societies of Boston are expected to be present. A funeral oration will be delivered by a prominent priest or layman.

DOCKSTADER MINSTRELS TO SWELL QUAKE FUND

Boston theatregoers will have a chance to do two things at once; see a good show and at the same time add to the fund being raised for the Italian earthquake sufferers.

The show will be a special performance to be given Tuesday afternoon at the Bowdoin Square Theatre by Dockstader's old minstrels. The entire proceeds derived from this performance will be turned over to Lee, Higginson & Co., treasurer of the Boston Relief fund.

Indications point to a big success, in which the general theatre going public will have a chance to participate. As before stated one will be able to help a good cause and also see a good show.

Dockstader's minstrels have always been one of the premier attractions in Boston, and this in itself should be sufficient to pack the theater on Tuesday afternoon.

FEARS FAMILY IS LOST IN MESSINA

West Medford Man Anxious Over Fate Parents, Three Brothers and Five Sisters.

Eighteen-year-old Paolina Pistorino, one of the belles of Messina, is believed to have been killed in the earthquake. Her brother, Joseph Pistorino of No. 152 Jerome street, West Medford, is one of the most prominent Italians in Greater Boston. He is connected with Ranea Stabile of No. 178 North street and he is also secretary-treasurer of the Italian Relief Committee of New England. His sister had just graduated from the high school in Messina and Mr. Pistorino was looking forward to her coming here for her.

"It is terrible to be kept in such suspense," said Mr. Pistorino in a Sunday American reporter. "I have sent four cables to Italy, but have received no response. I sent some of them to Messina and some to Naples. As my people lived near the American consulate, it is my belief that they must have perished when the American consul, from falling walls.

"My father, Augustine Pistorino, was a collector in the city of Messina. My three brothers and five sisters lived at home with my father. My brothers were Fortunato, Antinino and Francesco, while the sisters were Paolina, Sarina, Domenica, Emilia and Concettina."

HUB GIRL SWIMMER LOSES PLUCKY RACE

Aequatic contests and sports in the large tank in Mechanics Hall attended the fall of the evening last night at the Automobile Show and the greater part of the 6,000 present enjoyed a treat in the exhibition swimming races. Miss Mary Mollonough of South Boston, New York champion, under the tutelage of Elaine Golding of New York, world's one-mile champion, Miss Golding from 20 minutes and 10 seconds, leading the South Boston girl by two lengths of the swimming tank, 120 feet.

During the first time Miss McDonough has competed in a tank and the first time she has had anything in which she has been in the water. She made a plucky effort, but lost repeatedly on the turns, due to her lack of familiarity in tank swimming.

Miss Golding from the start showed her superiority. She is a much larger and stronger young woman than the South Boston girl, and her sports of speed were shown at the close of the race, Miss Golding warmly congratulating the plucky South Boston girl over effort.

The 100-yard handicap was won by Frank O'Laughlin, with Emil Untersee second. Benjamin Gilbert and Maurice Yopan fourth. James was scratch man.

The mile race, 40 yards, was won by Lee G. Rich, with Maurice Toppan second. Miss Golding, the same time, with Charles Bowker second.

MONSTER PARADE TO AID RELIEF WORK

A parade of the members of all of the Italian societies of Greater Boston, with hundreds of express wagons following in the rear to take up contributions of money, food and clothing, will be the unique plan of prominent Italians of this city to help the suffering homeless and poorly clad earthquake victims of Messina.

Preliminary steps in this direction are in a preliminary state as yet, but it is hoped by Avolio to get everything well under way by 6 o'clock in the morning. The committee having the affair still has to meet and decide upon the exact time for the parade to start, but it will probably be at 10 o'clock. It will go over the parade passes stated points.

It is hoped that at least 5,000 men will be in line, representing the sixty-five Italian organizations of Greater Boston. A number of bands have already volunteered their services for the day.

Efforts are being made to have the big express companies provide teams for the free use of the committee in collecting contributions, but in case they refuse, wagons or teams will be found useful and will be secured.

The route of the parade has not been mapped out, but it will take in the North, West and South ends and possibly certain parts of the business and Back Bay districts.

With the generous offers of assistance from the express companies the committee will go to-morrow be able to make definite announcement. This, members of the committee said to-day, will greatly facilitate the work of collecting clothing and contributions of food and have these ready when the express wagons pass by.

Prominent Italians who have interested themselves in the proposed plan have been busy all day, driven by a number of merchants and have received offers of assistance in many of the lines of clothing to be being boxed up ready to be loaded into the express wagons.

As many of the Italian societies hold meetings Sunday evening, the relief matter will be gone over and arrangements completed.

All food, clothing and money collected will be turned over to the Massachusetts Red Cross, which will send the donations to the stricken Italian sufferers.

ITALIAN LAWYERS OF CITY OFFER SERVICES

The Italian lawyers of this city have organized themselves into a speaking bureau to address New England relief meetings on conditions in the stricken earthquake district. They have sent the following letter to the mayors of all the New England cities:

NEW YORK RELIEF FUND AMOUNTS TO $200,000

New York, Jan. 2.—More than $60,000 was added to the earthquake relief fund in this city to-day. Contributions poured in all day to the various relief agencies. The stock exchange alone raised $53,000. The American Red Cross received $15,000. The total relief fund in this city to date is $175,000. Another quarter of a million is expected to be raised during the week.

CHICAGO CONTRIBUTION WILL AMOUNT TO $100,000

Chicago, Jan. 2.—Amid a scene of enthusiasm seldom paralleled in charitable enterprises, $8,000 was tossed into a silk hat to-day by members of the board of trade, when President Hiram N. Sager in a brief speech from the gallery urged members to help the dying and suffering people of earthquake stricken Sicily and Calabria. At least $100,000, it is understood, will be the total amount sent and available from all sources in Chicago.

THE IDEA EDITOR,
Boston Sunday American,
80 Summer St., Boston.

$HY IDEAS.

Two hundred dollars in gold for ideas!

The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN wants two ideas and will pay $200 in gold for them. Also, the very best ideas tha tthe brain of man and woman has been able to suggest, and made the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN the great newspaper that it is to-day.

Now it wants more. The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN is a great newspaper, else you would not be reading it to-day.

But understand this: It wants more ideas, not that it is running out of its own supply of ideas, but that it wants to get more ideas direct from its large family of readers in Greater Boston.

There's a very forceful version for this desire. After all, the real editor of a paper is its readers taken in a class. If there were no readers there would be no newspapers. This fact is obvious.

Must Reflect Public Opinion.

The success of a newspaper—and the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN is proud to say it is a success—is that which most seriously and conscientiously reflects the opinions and ideas of the public. It will be given credit when the so-called public opinion is decided by one man. The function and duty of the editor of to-day is to ascertain what the public wants and needs, and, if the demand is salutary and sensible, to aid in attaining its realization.

The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN has ever been conducted upon such broad principles. Now what the people demand, and seeing that the public gets full measure for what it is willing to pay.

That is why to-day the paper asks you for your ideas and announces its intention to pay you for advice.

Printed with this are two questions on an especially prepared form, which you are requested to answer. Reply by men and it may mean $100 in gold in your pocket.

There's a probability of earning any sum, from $100, down to $1.

Convert your wits into cash. Fill out the blank form and send it to the Idea Editor of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

The questions, in effect, are:

—What features or department in the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN do you like best, and what is your reason for preferring it?

—What department not now contained in the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN would you like to see regularly featured?

What idea have you in the way of suggesting something that would add to the excellence of the paper?

Should you send an answer from any reader in Greater Boston, to these two simple questions the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN will pay $100 in cash.

For the next best answer, there is a prize of $50, and for third best answer $25 will be paid.

Five Premiums of $5 Each.

Besides these cash valuations on ideas, the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN will pay $5 to each writer of the next five letters, telling why his or her favorite feature is the most interesting and what he or she would do to improve the paper. There are no limiting conditions attached to this offer. It is open to every newspaper reader in Boston, old or young, rich or poor, man, woman or child.

There are only two conditions to this competition of business sense. One is that the man be a regular reader of the Boston Sunday American living in Greater Boston. The attention will be paid to letters from occasional readers, for it would be unfair to allow them to enter the decision of those steady readers for whom the paper is mainly conducted.

The other condition is that each reply to the two questions shall not exceed twenty-five words in length. That makes it easy for all which can be answered to answer the questions.

Contest is Open to Everybody.

Remember that it is the idea that is being paid for. Handwriting doesn't count. Neither does originality or style or beauty of rhetoric enter into the case. The thought is there you'll be paid for it. A boy, girl or girl can get the first premium by "delivering the goods."

Begin to write at once. Don't delay in sending your answers. There will be thousands of them and the Idea Editor will have a giant task on his hands. In order to facilitate matters all the letters and giving each one proper and just consideration.

Lest there be some confusion as to what is meant by Greater Boston in the which competition in the idea contest is conducted, the following list of towns is printed, any reader of the Boston Sunday American residing therein is eligible:

TUNNEL BARGAIN BASEMENT IS NEWEST SHOP.

Filene's Underground Store to Be Opened To-morrow, a Novelty in World of Trade.

Starting tomorrow under the name of the Tunnel Bargain Basement, William Filene Sons Company, corner of Washington and West streets, will open what is said to be a store wholly unlike any in the entire world of trade. In the space formerly used for packing and shipping, but made too valuable by the opening of the Washington street tunnel, the display windows literally under ground, the floors have established a great shop in active, been completion with a half story regular stories above. An entirely new staff of salesmen and saleswomen has been employed, while the men who will do the buying will be outside of the regular list of buyers and in the keenest competition with them.

The underground store will handle exactly the same quality of merchandise as upstairs, but will be devoted solely to odd lots, "one" samples, overstocks, broken sizes, single articles, unmatched bits, manufacturers' surpluses, ends of materials, etc.

"Disappearing Prices."

A novel feature of the undertaking will be its "disappearing prices."

The prices of goods, bargains at the start, will be cut twenty-five per cent. a week. At the end of the fourth week it, if any goods remain, they will be given away. The prices will literally "disappear," and the public will get the purchaser, of course.

The store will have an entrance from the Washington street tunnel.

The whole idea has been carefully thought out. A representative of William Filene Sons Company thus explains the experiment:

"We have found that there is a great opportunity in the field of underselling, and we think it cannot fail. There are many lines of manufacturers of goods of the highest grades who are often left in the lurch with consignments of merchandise which a quick movement is necessary to avoid heavy loss.

Guarantee to Public.

"The one thing they have to assure us of is quality up to the Filene standard and we will stand by their goods through this machinery. We are in the market for this product and we will give our word of honor that every article we advertise is what we claim. We have for years sold our employes a reward of one dollar for every instance in which an advertisement was in any way in error as to quality, price or description of fact.

"Now we extend this to the general public and if they find anything we find it single article in the new underground store which is not exactly as we have stated in any way from the thing advertised we will refund a cash reward.

"We mean to use this underground store to sell goods at less and trade at more than upstairs also.

"What is the general interest in this new store is the fact that Filene's already is the largest exclusive clothing house in the world exclusively for women's, misses' and children's clothing, or is having branches in Paris, Chemnitz, Germany, and Vienna, Austria.

There is little likelihood of the public being late getting through the doors when the prices are extraordinary the merchandise will be such as is commonly sold at the regularly my counter. On the contrary this new tunnel Bargain Basement will sell high-grade goods—imported models as well as the more popular types.

CHARGES OF GRAFT STIR PAWTUCKET CITIZENS.

Civic League to Probe Allegations of Waste in Stone Crusher Deal.

ATTACK CITY MACHINE

Pawtucket, R. I., Jan. 2—Acting upon a resolution passed by the recent meeting Robert J. Bridges, ex-councilman of the third ward, has tentatively started a civil league composed of fifteen of the prominent men in this city. The committee of men who pledged themselves to do their utmost towards purifying the city government and support the movement now under way to investigate alleged "graft" in the city departments. The move to appoint this civic league came after Governor James H. Higgins had denounced a number of public officials of the city as "grafters." The denouncement came as a sequel to a number of court actions, in which Attorney Hugh J. Carroll, on the one prosecutor of an allegation of corruption in connection with the purchase of stone for the city.

The allegations against the office holders of the city are flying so thick and fast that many an official is facing with dread when he will be singled out. If the statements made by Governor Higgins and Lawyer Carroll are proven true there are prospects of lively times at the City Hall in the next few months that will involve many a court action.

City Loses By Sale of Stone.

It is alleged by Attorney Carroll, and his statements are backed up by Governor Higgins, that the city has lost a large amount of money through the sale of stone to the Public Works department of the city by a Central Falls contractor. It is claimed that almost double the amount of money has been paid than was necessary.

The charges of fraud arose in the city's department come from a sworn statement made by Miss Ophilie Bedard, a young woman of Central Falls who was a short time ago brought face to face in Superior Court of Central Falls by the sworn statement before Governor Higgins that while the amount of stone that was actually delivered was paid for by the city. In particular during the past two years. Miss Bedard made affidavit that she left for Canada for a visit for an indefinite period. Governor Higgins has publicly declared that she has been kept away from the city by interested city officials.

It is alleged that the stone by the building was was first used by George P. Maynard, a real estate broker of the city, who had no connection with the stone. Governor Higgins declares that there is sufficient evidence in his hands for the arrest of Mr. Beattie, but he says he are pursuing the line of that action is not to be served on account of Higgins for criminal libel. Governor Higgins states that it is his most earnest desire that such of the officials of the city as are guilty shall be found, and thus bring the long desired opportunity to get some of the city officials on the stand under oath.

Call for Public Investigation.

Attorney Carroll is using every means in his power to force a fair basis on the stone crusher case and he and his supporters are calling for a public investigation. Attorney Carroll has been appointed a special attorney by Attorney General William E. Greenough.

Another move against the Republican machine of the city in the recent contest the City Treasurer to whom was paid a personal check for $1,125 refuses to still more public scandal. The legality of the Third Ward [illegible] of the rule that [illegible] take from three to [illegible] complete the work. It is almost every case the voters declare that they have paid their taxes to men in the employ of the city though before the Supreme Court it was charged that these taxes in question had been paid by a city official after the City Treasurer's office had been closed.

HAINS CONFIDENT HIS OWN STORY TO JURY TOMORROW WILL FREE HIM

WILL DESCRIBE HIS GUARDIANSHIP OF BROTHER.

Climax of Novelist's Trial for Complicity in the Death of Annis.

Flushing, L. I., Jan. 2—When his trial for complicity in the death of William E. Annis is resumed Monday morning, Thornton Jenkins Hains will take the witness stand in his own behalf.

"We are not going to lead Thornton in his story of the sad events which led up to the shooting of William E. Annis, by his brother," said John F. McIntyre, his chief counsel, to-day. "The law requires that we ask questions from time to time, but otherwise Thornton will be allowed to tell the story in his own way. Thornton Hains alone will start at the period just previous to his sister's return from the Philippines. He will tell the jury that no slur, no breath of any scandal, touched his sister-in-law until Annis, after he had denied publicly that he wrote any letters to the capitals, which prompted his return. The whole has been trying ever since the defence entered to prove such a letter.

"The second chapter of Thornton Hains' testimony will be his recital of what his brother told him of the story, and his account of the scene in the parlor of the Captain's quarters at Fort Hamilton during which Mrs. Claudia Hains signed an alleged confession.

"Then will come a description of the Captain's rear entrance and behavior after the tragedies. All this will have a most direct bearing on the insanity plea which will be entered direct when Captain Hains goes on trial in the next few weeks, and which is entered now by proxy for Thornton. The prisoner will tell how he was forced to retain the captain when they met Annis in Manhattan late to face before the judge tried to have it.

"Thornton Hains's own story of the actual tragedy is probably the part of his testimony in which the jury will have the greatest interest. There have been contradictions galore on the part of state's witnesses—no two eye witnesses have told the same story.

"To Make or Break His Case."

"Mrs. Annis declares that she was on the float and that Thornton Hains put his revolver to her back, telling her to stand back or she would get what her husband got. Another eye witness, Terpay, declares that Mrs. Annis was not on the float at all. It is while Thornton Hains's power on Monday and Tuesday for he will be on the stand, it is believed, the better part of two days—to make or to break his own case.

"Thornton Hains is confident of vindication, and is eagerly awaiting his summons to the witness chair. He says:

"With my faith firmly pinned upon the honesty and the manly character of my American jury, I feel that the new year has for me no bodings of ill. In a few more days the twelve men will have heard the mass of evidence which may lawyers have put in my favor and that they can then come to but one decision—that of belief and conviction.

"The security of the American hearthstone is safe in the hands of such men. Were it not for the sad conditions of my poor brother, 'Pete,' this holiday season would be materially different to me from other such as have gone before. What are prison bars to a man who stands for a principle, a man who knows he is innocent of any crime. I think most people will agree with me that if my case had already passed then the evidence given in the cold freezing courtroom made it more easily understood.

General and Mrs. Peter C. Hains who braved the ordeal of the witness stand for their son, Thornton, on trial at Flushing, L. I. Sketched in the Courtroom by Artist Forsythe.

Eager to Tell Story.

"Can any one after hearing and reading the testimony of the leading characters in the case, Mrs. Claudia Hains, Captain Hains, Mrs. Annis, Mrs. Terpay, Mrs. Hains, Mrs. Annis, Mrs. Terpay, Mrs. Hains, Mrs. Annis, Mrs. Terpay, Mrs.

16 BASEBALL DOINGS ON MONDAY'S CARD.

National Commission Has Important Matters to Settle at Its Cincinnati Meeting.

NO OFFER TO SWAP DAHLEN

Herrmann Hasn't Heard of It Yet; Dovey Must Answer Kelley's Complaint.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 2.—One of the most important meetings ever held by the National Commission, the "Supreme Court of Baseball," will again to-morrow in the office of Chairman Garry Herrmann. President Johnson of the American League is already on the ground, and President Pulliam of the National League is on the way.

The row among the minor leagues will be taken up, and it is very likely that the ticket scandal that grew out of the world's championship series last October will be reopened, as Ban Johnson, the skipper of the American League, is determined to see justice done. He does not believe in "whitewashing" methods and wants the guilty ones punished and driven out of baseball.

Deserters to Be Heard.

The third important matter for discussion is the application of the deserting ball players who want to come back into the fold and the application of the several major leagues men who played exhibition games with men who were on the ineligible list. Among the deserters who want to be forgiven are Hal Chase, Beyreiberg and Elmer Stricklett.

From a Boston standpoint the presence here of George B. Dovey, of The Boston Nationals, bids fair to start some fews. He left home at the request of Frank Bowerman, his manager to pass on some trades Bowerman has on hand. One of them involves the swap of Dahlen for Alperey, the Reds third baseman. If this goes through doubtless Cincinnati will get another swap with Brooklyn in which it will give Brooklyn Dahlen as manager.

Boston Hasn't Offered Dahlen.

But Dreibnatt declares that no propositions have been presented by Boston. "There has been a lot of talk about Boston wanting Mike Mowrey," said Mr. Herrmann, "but neither Mr. Dovey nor Bowerman has ever made a proposition for the third baseman, either in cash or for trade. We are willing to consider propositions for almost any man on our team, but to date Boston has not expressed a wish to us to take any of the men off of our hands."

When Bowerman was here some weeks ago he declared that he considered Lieut. Hennessy a better third baseman than Mowrey. However if he should secure "Red Mike" he probably would see him at the third corner and switch Sweeney to Dahlen's old position.

Although President Dovey and Manager Bowerman were expected to day they failed to arrive, so that there is no prospect of any deals being made by the Boston and Cincinnati clubs until Sunday or later.

President Ebbets of the Brooklyn club has wired President Herrmann that he would arrive here Sunday afternoon and the prospects are that President Dovey will come with him.

The Boston manager has also to answer the complaint in the Kelley case, which Kelley has sent the National Commission his contract that calls for $2,400 a year as manager in Boston. Kelley is demanding that he either be placed in charge of the team or paid a year's salary in full. Mr. Dovey's argument is that Kelley did not give satisfaction, and, besides, he can step into the management of the Toronto club and secure the same amount of salary as his Boston contract calls for.

Preparing Its Schedules.

In addition to the National Commission ing the joint schedule committees of the two big leagues will get together for a first session this year. The schedule for the Fort will again be made by the American league people, as they selected it last year, so as to begin the season later in the spring. It has been suggested by the Ban Johnson circuit, in case the Nationals go here to 154 games for each team, to begin later and let the schedule extend further into October. It is pointed out that of late years the seasons have been changing and that Spring and Fall both come later than heretofore.

At the meeting of the schedule committee an effort will be made to further guard against conflict of teams in cities which have two major organizations.

Close to fight again.

JEFF SAYS HE NEVER GAVE CHAMP TITLE AWAY.

When He Retired, He Writes, He Took the Title With Him to Keep.

DOUBTS IF HE COULD TRAIN

No Amount of Money Could Drag Him Into the Roped Arena Again.

By James J. Jeffries.

(Retired and Undefeated Heavyweight Champion of the World.)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 2.—Just a few words in connection with the uproar that has been raised in connection with the demands that I return to the ring and attempt to reclaim the title that Tommy Burns gave up to Jack Johnson, the negro in my weight.

To begin with, I do not intend to fight again—mark this as fini. I have burned up many dollars in telegraph tolls during the past week or so, telling different people in all parts of the country that I do not intend to re-enter the ring. I also have printed many statements in the newspapers to this effect, but the public seems inclined to doubt my sincerity. It was as if every man was saying, "Quit your joking, Jeff." When I have said going to whip this negro and win back the title."

They seem to take it for granted that all I have to do is to get my hair cut, jump the rope about two weeks and I am fair of being given and they never stop to think that I have been out of the game for over four years, during which time I gymnasium has had the least of my attention.

Why Jeff Won't Fight.

I have enjoyed my ring career, and it has been finished. I am now enjoying a title that no boxer ever held before and probably never will hold after me. I have my home, my wife, my business, my health and my friends. I am not rich, but I have all the money I need and will never want for anything. If I should see fit to bit and I was to be swept off my feet without having the world, then I might try to retrieve some of my position by fighting again. As it is I will go on as I am, enjoying my home, my friends and not every day life. Why, if it was more money I was after, I would not have to fight for it. I have rejected a fortune in theatrical offers during the past year.

The negro is a champion sp. I am a contented man, and I will defend I respect his ring record, upon my business and honor life for the sake of a few dollars that I do not need? Another thing, do not believe that the great American public wants to see me come out of retirement. I believe that they would rather point to me as an undefeated champion retired. The hundreds of telegrams that I have been receiving come mostly from newspaper men who are looking for a good story and from others who would be benefitted by my consenting to fight again.

Never Gave Title Away.

Right here I want to correct a wrong impression. I did not give the title to Jack Root, Martin Hart or anybody else. Even if I retired I took the title with me, and the fact that these fellows claimed that I gave them the title to fight for was a press agent's yarn.

Was I afraid to defend the title? No, I do not believe that I could go back to the ring next week and whip Jack Johnson. Why I am not the Jim Jeffries of four years ago. Since I retired from the practice of a brief period and such an athletic event is hardly to be surpassed for striking the point of fancy.

Dorando Indorses Race.

While regretting that, Dorando Pietri, the fleet Italian, cannot be present at the Marathon, the race committee of the Boston American appreciates the indorsement given by Dorando to the race. The committee wrote to Dorando, inviting him to start the race and explaining to him that the proceeds would be devoted to the Italian Relief Fund. This appealed doubly to Dorando, as shown by the following letter of regret received by the committee yesterday:

"I thank you very much for the compliment you bestowed upon me in asking me to act as starter for your Marathon race. I rejoice at the splendid initiative you have taken in the Italian relief work. I should be very glad to accept and be in your city to meet the great event, but the Marathon race, on account of being under contract to appear in St. Louis on January 11, I find it impossible to be with you.

"With my best regards, I remain, sincerely yours,

"DORANDO PIETRI."

While the Race Committee was regretting Dorando's enforced absence, it was gratified to receive a telegram of praise from James B. Sullivan of New York, president of the A. A. U. Mr. Sullivan served as President Roosevelt's Commissioner at the Olympic Games at Athens in 1906. As President of the A. A. U. he is the premier athletic official in the land. From far and near comes praise of the Boston American's plan for a Marathon race to be held here next Saturday for the benefit of the Italian earthquake sufferers.

Interest in the project grows apace. Entries are coming in. Some of the best runners of the East are expected to compete.

The idea of a Marathon charity race has "caught on," as the expression goes.

Dorando Pietri of running fame, writes his deep regrets that he cannot come here and serve as starter. He is now in St. Louis that day.

The relief feature of the race appeals to Dorando particularly, as he is an Italian.

"A splendid initiative," he calls the benefit plan.

Noted Athletes Praise Plan.

President James E. Sullivan of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, the foremost athletic official in the land, congratulates the Boston American, the prospective competitors and the Winner, to be.

Stanley Henry of Lynn, winner of the famous cross-country run of the Boston A. A. and a leading and now enters for the Marathon thinks the idea a splendid one. He looks for a big field of starters and substantial receipts for the charity fund.

Edward E. Babb, former president of the A. A. U. and a leading figure in the athletic world, is delighted, to use his own words, to serve as referee. The presence of Mr. Babb in this office is guarantee in itself that the race will be run off in sportsmanlike style and in thorough accord with even amateur sport rules. The committee's receipt of congratulation and commendation from Charles Zeller, retiring chairman of the Illinois Athletic Club.

Eager to Aid Stricken Italy.

Such are samples of the praise coming in from all quarters of the Marathon plan.

A Marathon race is one of the most, if not the most, popular forms of amateur athletics in the world to-day. The name conjures in athlete and spectator alike a thrill of joy. The mention of a brief period and such an athletic event is hardly to be surpassed for striking the popular fancy.

Secretary and Chief of the Boston Athletic Association, whose annual Marathon run on April 19 is the greatest of all sports. Dix draws rumors of world wide interest, but the one of the coming fair

George V. Brown, athletic manager of the B. A. A. and one of the greatest race starters in the country, will be one of the officials next Saturday. Other members of the B. A. A. who will serve as officials include Colonel George H. Hill Jr., the United States Immigration Commissioner, at this port and chairman of the B. A. A.'s athletic committee; Charles H. Carter, James T. McIntosh, A. Paul Keith, former Senator Joseph B. Maculay, a former president of the B. A. A.; William H. Fleming and George L. Hunter.

Other widely known athletic officials and patrons of amateur sport who will be among the officials at this race are Thomas F. Rorr of St. Peter's Parish and one of the A. A. U. governors; Frank Peery of Riverside A. C. and secretary of the A. A. U.; Thomas J. Conrick of the A. A. U.; Joseph McGuirk of the P. Street Gymnasium; William Hynes of the A. A.; H. H. Gallucci, Edward L. Hagan of South Boston A. C.; John J. Ryder of South Boston A. C.; Edmund F. Walsh of Armory A. A.; William F. Donovan of Harvard A. A.; H. C. McGrath of St. Joseph's A. A., and A. J. Hill of St. Joseph's Followers of amateur athletics know that any event which attracts these men's services is an event worth while.

Dorando Indorses Race.

While regretting that, Dorando Pietri, the fleet Italian, cannot be present at the Marathon, the race committee of the Boston American appreciates the indorsement given by Dorando to the race. The committee wrote to Dorando, inviting him to start the race and explaining to him that the proceeds would be devoted to the Italian Relief Fund. This appealed doubly to Dorando, as shown by the following letter of regret received by the committee yesterday:

"I thank you very much for the compliment you bestowed upon me in asking me to act as starter for your Marathon race. I rejoice at the splendid initiative you have taken in the Italian relief work. I should be very glad to accept and be in your city to meet the great event, but the Marathon race, on account of being under contract to appear in St. Louis on January 11, I find it impossible to be with you.

"With my best regards, I remain, sincerely yours,

"DORANDO PIETRI."

While the Race Committee was regretting Dorando's enforced absence, it was grateful to receive a telegram of praise from James B. Sullivan of New York, president of the A. A. U. Mr. Sullivan served as President Roosevelt's Commissioner at the Olympic Games at Athens in 1906. As President of the A. A. U. he is the premier athletic official in the land. His message of congratulation was:

Worthy Object Says Sullivan.

DORANDO FORCED TO QUIT IN RACE

Claims Heart Went Back on Him and Longboat Finished Alone.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 2.—For the second time since he came to this country and against the same man who defeated him in Madison Square Garden, Dorando, the Italian Marathon runner, who jumped into fame when he defeated Johnny Hayes, winner of the Olympic race, collapsed after he had gone eighteen miles and six laps of a twenty-five mile race against Tom Longboat, the Indian. He was carried to his dressing room, where he was revived with difficulty. After he regained consciousness the Italian claimed that his heart went back again and it was impossible for him to continue at the killing pace set by the Indian.

The collapse of Dorando did not daunt the Indian. Fresh as when he started in the race, Longboat kept jogging along and settled as though he had a field of contestants to the finish. When the Italian came over to this country and claimed that he was Johnny Hayes' master at the Marathon distance, and that he would not have been disqualified in the Olympic games had he not left shoe and fled, it was thought the Italian was making an excuse for his defeat by the little American.

But he proved Hayes' master easily although the latter claimed he was in poor condition and defeated Dorando's running ability in a night Dorando had agreed here to run, and now the hire match with Longboat last month at the Garden. After keeping up with the Heilin who set a killing pace, Dorando collapsed after the twenty-fifth mile and was forced to quit.

The men were matched again, but at 25 miles, and tonight a collapse of Dorando here and the result of Saturday's race would not have finished the Olympic marathon had he not been helped to the finish line.

Dorando will run a marathon race with Shrubb, the great English champion, in Madison Square, the latter part of March. To Englishman is unbeatable over a long race, but after the latter's defeat of Dorando it is predicted by fans and admirers that a will defeat the Pugilist.

Dorando is to appear in St. Louis on January 11, and it is impossible to be with you.

With my best regards, I remain, sincerely yours,

"DORANDO PIETRI."

"IT'S UP TO ME TO WIN BACK TITLE," SAYS CORBETT.

Says if Jeff Won't, He Will Meet Johnson in the Ring.

EXPECTS BIG BID FOR FIGHT

Former Champion in Excellent Trim Now, and Will Wait McIntosh's Arrival.

LEADVILLE, Col., Jan. 2.—If James J. Corbett, the former heavyweight champion of the world, isn't sincere in his talk about going after Jack Johnson, he is fooling a lot of people in this town. Before leaving for Denver to-night he repeated his statement that he is thinking seriously of fighting Johnson

"If I can make arrangements with my theatrical manager with whom I have a contract," said Corbett, "I will tackle the colored man. I, of course, expect that Mr. McIntosh, the Sydney promoter, will make the same offer to me that he did to Jeffries. The latter has positively refused to re-enter the ring and it is up to me to win back that title.

I have a strong aversion to a black man holding championship honors, and I believe if I make a match with Johnson the championship will come back to the white race.

Corbett's physical condition is first class in every respect, according to his statement. He weighed to-day in his street clothes 195 pounds. In fighting togs he would weigh 185 to 187.

"I never felt better in my life," declared the former champion, "and in spite of my fighting years I can confidently say I could get into as good fighting condition as I ever was. I have declined myself, and will do so until after Johnson, Sam Fitzpatrick and Tommy Ryan think about it. I am informed that Mr. McIntosh is coming to this country to seek an opponent for Johnson. I will be ready to meet him when he comes."

JOHN L. SAYS KETCHEL WOULD MAKE IDEAL CHAMPION.

Just a Plain American and a Man All Could Be Proud Of.

UNGAINLY, BUT HAS PUNCH

Veteran Writes: 'Keep Your Eye on This Fellow; He's Ready to Tackle the Heavies.'

By John L. Sullivan.

STANLEY KETCHEL weights today 185 pounds. He stands 5 feet, 10 inches, and was 21 years old on the 14th day of last September. I was 23½ years old, stood 5 feet, 10½ inches, and weighed a trifle more than Ketchel does now when I defeated Paddy Ryan at Mississippi City, Feb. 7, 1882. I make this comparison to illustrate what follows.

If I were looking around for a man to defeat Johnson (which I'm not, being in another line of business) I would hook up with this man Ketchel and point him toward the high place.

Ketchel got back to his home in Detroit the other day and declared he would continue to draw the color line. What I have to say, therefore, is not with the expectation that Ketchel and Johnson will come together, but rather what could be done if the cards laid right.

Ketchel weighed considerably more than 158 pounds when he defeated Papke a few weeks ago. He has taken on twenty pounds at least since that battle. He is still putting on weight and very soon it will be hard for him to get below 190 pounds. He is just past twenty-one years of age and before he is through he will have set so that 185 pounds will be about right, he ought to tip the scales at when in fighting condition

Ketchel a Tricky Fighter.

There are some things about the fighting game Ketchel does not know, a whole lot more cleverness wouldn't do him a bit of harm. He is a tricky fighter however and this oftentimes makes up for lack of skill.

Cleverness can be taught to a man like Ketchel. He is full of fighting courage. They tried to pose him for pictures the other day, but he couldn't keep still long enough. He is built on the lines of the men who lost to an opponent and came back for a second and still another, and finally won the honors.

Ketchel never stood nothing to him and was fought four or five battles and 412 rounds. He was knocked out forty-one times, fought four draws, won two points on decisions and was knocked out once by Papke.

Ketchel says he is going to treat Jeffries right if he doesn't take a walk. If that is good for him, keep your eye on this fellow or soon he will be after some of the heavies. He is only twenty-one years old, and some one should look after his interests. He is a comparatively unknown quantity at present, but he bids fair to be heard from before long. He is a hard hitter and seems to have unbounded confidence in himself.

It is [illegible] and every one should not [illegible] the Boston American [illegible] so forward to in letting a big success every way. The winner I wish to congratulate because it is an honor to win an event [illegible] celebrating the subject of [illegible]

News of this Marathon run and its worthy object reached Chicago straightaway word was sent back East to the Race Committee of the Boston American by "Charley" Keller of the Illinois A. C., giving his warm consideration of the idea. Keller is chairman of the Athletic Committee of the L. A. C. and that is what he says.

Chicago, Jan. 2

"My last official act before relinquishing the chairmanship of this office is to extend the Illinois Athletic Club's hearty congratulations to the winner of the Boston American's Marathon run and to add our personal appreciation for the generous spirit in which your editor has come to the aid of the sufferers. I think the Marathon ever decided for a worthy cause should help put the Italian fund [illegible] CHARLES J. KELLER, Chairman Athletic Committee I. A. C.

Dovey Offers Grounds.

All America knows George B. Dovey, president of the Boston National Baseball Club, the "Doves," as they are called in the business slang of baseball. He is willing for amateur sport if he is the head of a professional athletic organization. A Marathon run, [illegible] Dovey. The idea of a Marathon for the benefit of the Italian sufferers [illegible] doubly.

So, when the Race Committee of the Boston American asked Mr Dovey if the Marathon race could have its finish on the Boston National ball grounds on Columbus avenue, so that the gate receipts could be taken for the benefit of the relief fund, he couldn't utter the words quick enough.

"Sure," said the boss of the Doves, "why, you might have known I would without asking me."

The use of the Columbus avenue grounds helps the Marathon plan splendidly. The runners, starting from the twenty-six-mile course from Ashland, will enter the ball grounds at the left field end around a track which is to be built on the ball grounds. They will finish right in front of the grandstand.

Admission will be charged to see the finish at the grounds. Spectators in the grandstand or on the grounds will see the gruelling test of the race, the hardest sporting event at the close of which victory is won or lost.

Gate Receipts for Victims.

Usually Marathon races are all free as air, literal. From the very nature of the event it is impossible to run them for private gain. One contest race of twenty-six miles of the United States and charge admission.

But, for this relief fund object, the finish can be held inside the baseball grounds, with all admission fees to be turned over to the fund. All receipts at the gate will be given to Lee, Higginson & Co., official treasurers of the Italian Relief Fund. Everyone who pays at the ball ground gate next Saturday noon may [illegible] pay noon [illegible] or her money will go to helping the stricken people of Italy and shattered Sicily.

The athletes who compete in the race will have a valuable silver trophy offered by the Boston American as first prize for their efforts. This trophy and the prestige of winning the Marathon will be the reward of the winner. The first other ten men to finish will be awarded medals in honor of finishing.

Over Ashland Course.

The race will be over the regular Ashland course, famous for the B. A. Marathons. The start will be at twelve, noon, Saturday, January 9, near the Ashland House at Ashland, so that the full Marathon course of 26 miles, 385 yards will be run.

Entries for the race should be sent to the Marathon Race Committee of the Boston American Athletic Association and registered with the A. A. A. At the time his entries are sent in for the race, for instance, must be registered with A. Frank Lacey, 1140 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, secretary of the New England A. A. U. Some runners do not have papers in their names to the Race Committee have not been registered with Secretary Lacey. They are cautioned to attend to this before the race is held entries will necessarily be rejected.

It is expected that some of the best distance runners in the East will take part in the race. Definite news has been sent to such runners as Bobby" Fowler of the Lynnfield A. C., who won the Dewey-Yerk Marathon at Yonkers, to John Daly of the Irish-American A. C., who finished second at Yonkers, to Sydney Hatch of Illinois A. C. to Joe Forshaw of the New Century A. C. and to others whose names are synonymous with endurance runs.

Henry Out to Win.

Yesterday the Race Committee received, among other entries, that of Charles Henry of Lynn T. C. A., a notable runner and the man who won the cross country run of the Armory A. A. last Washington's Birthday.

Henry has the true Marathon spirit. "This run is for the benefit of the Italian sufferers. I am not in the running, but will be extra interested in the event. The idea of having the finish on the baseball grounds ought to appeal to patrons of baseball. I enjoy a game from the grandstands filled for the finish fight. Certainly this run will be a big success. The Boston American is to be congratulated for its enterprise. Every big sporting stone ought to make the event a big success financially."

Henry thinks that a Marathon in Winter will be just the favorite as ever from an athletic standpoint as one in the Spring.

"I believe the cold weather will prove a great help," he says, "and I fully expect to see some records broken. The cold, crisp air ought to aid the runners. And if aids me, for after I have run several miles through the cold air, I have better wind and am fresher for finishing."

Henry's record makes his words and opinions worthy of attention. He jumped into fame when he won the Armory A. A. run last Spring. He finished fourteenth in the 1908 Marathon of the A. A. A. and second in the Cambridge A. A.'s six-mile run the following July. Last August he was second man in the twelve-mile run of the Cambridge A. A. and he started next to scratch in the six-mile run of the Cambridge Institute and was the second man to finish.

RECORD BENCH SHOW NEW MEN TAKE TO THIS YEAR HERE BREEDING HORSES

New England Kennel Club Has Been Most Liberal in its Offerings to Dog Owners.

With a premium list of $5,000, in addition to a large number of ribbons and 400 medals to be competed for at the twenty-fifth annual show of the New England Kennel Club, in Mechanics Building on February 22, 23, 24 and 25, the chances are that the biggest bench show ever held in this section will result. The club has been most liberal in its offerings in past years, but never in such an extent as they have been for the show to be held in February.

The reason for the extra large offering is on account of the fact that the event will mark the quarter century during which time shows have come and gone, but this club has continued to hold its annually, each one more successful than the one before until now the officers are highly elected to make the next the banner show in the club's uninterrupted history.

Medals for Prizes, Too.

For this reason the extra large sum of money was voted and for this reason, too, it was voted to reduce the entrance fee from $5 to $3 in some cases, and but $1 in some of the others. Then, too, the idea of giving medals will be tried this year for the first time in Boston these making valuable possessions for the owners lucky enough to win them.

In all the club has decided to have 450 classes and every breed and every type that could be thought of has been put into the premium list until there is now, as it seems, a chance for every owner of a dog of any kind to enter.

[illegible] year it will be necessary to [illegible] for a dog to have a pedigree in order to be shown. In the past it was necessary for a dog to have a pedigree in order to stand any chance or even to be shown, but when the next show is held this will be wholly unnecessary.

Dog Without Pedigrees.

The reason for the change is due to the fact that there are many fine dogs around the country whose pedigrees are unknown to their owners, though of fine points, and for this reason it was decided Jan. 13, when there may be obtained at the office of the club rooms 7 and 8, No. 53 Devonshire street.

HANLON DRAWS WITH BERGIN

Portland, Me., Jan. 2.—Jimmie Hanlon of Boston and Tommy Bergin of Lewiston fought six fast rounds to a draw at the Pastime Athletic Club here to-night. Though Lewiston boy had the strongest waiting, the Boston boy's ring generalship and cleverness made up for the difference. In the first round Bergin got Hanlon in a bad way and the boy stayed in from a mix down and out for [illegible] Hanlon [illegible] Bergin, not fighting a scary game in the second round he came back in the third, and for the next four rounds it was give and take, with the Boston boy getting away from the greater power of the Lewiston lad's punches and scoring in an uppercut now and then which sent Bergin to [illegible]

DARTMOUTH HOCKEY TEAM SCORES EASY VICTORY

Beats Winchester Country Club, 5 to 0, on the Upper Mystic.

Dartmouth's hockey team added another victory to the ice yesterday by beating the Winchester Country Club seven on the Upper Mystic by the score of 5 to 0.

The collegians were in fine fettle after playing several contests around the Hub, and the local players, who were playing their first big game, did not have much of a chance against the light but fast college team.

The presence of the crack Dartmouth team drew a big crowd of ice enthusiasts to the new rink which the club has recently erected, and they saw some high-class hockey by both sides.

Dartmouth displayed superior team work, but individually did not excel to any great degree. The home team was lacking in practice, else would have given the collegians a harder tussle.

Captain Heard of the Winchester team severely injured his knee in the second half and had to withdraw, which no doubt also weakened his team and Dartmouth took advantage of it to increase its score.

Captain Richardson of the winning combination played a star game for Dartmouth and was making starting plays all over the surface.

Leighton also seconded his leader in showing a fine article of ice hockey. Gifford for the home team played strongly at goal and his clever work at the cage saved Winchester a worse beating.

In the first period Dartmouth scored three of its goals, as the college team started off at a fast pace.

It was harder work for Dartmouth to rage the rubber in the second half and it took fifteen minutes before Captain Stucklin made a successful shot. He managed to get another good one before the whistle blew.

Both teams used a number of substitutes as the heated pace told on the players. The summary:

LANGFORD SAYS HE WILL STOP KETCHEL

Will Waive Rights to Purse if He Can't Win In Ten Rounds.

San Francisco, Jan. 2.—Determined that the middleweight title should rest upon the shoulders of another colored man, Sam Langford, the Eastern middleweight, who has created quite a sensation in the ring, to-day made a most astonishing statement in support of his challenges to stanley Ketchel.

The lad who has been trimming heavyweights declared that he will make 154 pounds for Stanley Ketchel and stop him inside of ten rounds. To make the inducement stronger for the Michigan kid, Langford says if he fails to fulfil his part of the contract he will waive all rights to his end of the purse.

The astonishing part of Langford's offer is that he will do ringside weight, and he will permit Ketchel to come in at 158 pounds. Langford's statement reads in all reports that the colored man is a 158 pound fighter if asked to do 154 pounds. Sam is confident that he can make the weight and feel strong, and what is more, he feels certain that he can take the title from the Grand Rapids lad at the weight.

Langford has proven that he is a dangerous man not only in the middleweight division, but with the heavyweights, and he will get a chance to meet the white man in the ring in the near future if he is allowed, as only yesterday Ketchel made a statement that he would not fight a colored man.

A match between Ketchel and Langford would be a great drawing card and the battle would be one of the best that could be staged in the West. Langford has cabled wired Ketchel at Detroit to learn if the latter will accept battle, but as yet has received no answer.

LANGFORD AND KETCHEL MEET TUESDAY AT ARMORY

Roxbury Slugger to Get Real Ring Test Tuesday at Armory A. A. in Main Bout.

Is Roxbury going to send out another John L. in the person of Bill McKinney? We shall see shortly, as McKinnon is going to make his first appearance locally as a main bout performer when he faces veteran Jack (Twin) Sullivan in the ring at the Armory A. A. on Tuesday night.

It is only just recognition of McKinney's past performances in the squared circle. He has beaten all the semi-final fighters the club has secured to mix with him. He never refused to meet any of them, and only the hardest nuts to crack were served up for to test him out.

He has made good. Beaten them all and now his real chance to move higher up is come.

Jack Twin, the hero of many a hard fought ring battle, who has met champions and no-day in after the best in the world at say weight, says that he does not [illegible] the youngster on his and has promised for the match with the same amount of hard training as if he was going against [illegible] with when McKinnon's reputation.

In addition to the main bout, there is a great deal of interest in the eight-round contest between Jerry Gaines of Cambridge and Billy Rolfe of South Boston.

Gaines wants to redeem himself for his showing against McKinnon, while Rolfe after his victory over Jack Fitzgerald, will have many friends who believe he will grow victorious. The opening bout of eight rounds between Young Limerick of Harvard and George Alger of Cambridge is sure to be one of the fastest bouts, as both lads are eager to make good.

ALCO CARS ON SHOW AT THE WALDORF

New Price List With Substantial Reductions Issued by Locomotive Company.

An automobile show of three weeks duration is being held at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, by the American Locomotive Company, while the two shows of the manufacturers' associations at the Grand Central Palace and Madison Square Garden come and go as "also" shows of the locomotive company will be continually on exhibition until January 23, no rain in the week between the closing of the Palace show and the opening of the one in the Garden there will still be running this special exhibit at the Waldorf.

This idea of keeping itself and its product attractive and holding a separate show is in line with the general policy of the locomotive company, which had an exhibit at the Waldorf during the show period last year. Manager James Jones says it is more satisfactory in every way. The show of the locomotive cars this year is notable for the fact that this will be the first time they have been exhibited under their own name. The novelty in arrangement with the French chassis [illegible] and the name of Berliet dropped entirely, although the cars continue the use of the French design and imported materials.

From now on they are to be known under the name of "Alco," which is formed from the initials of the American Locomotive Company, as they appear on the new button on the cars. This departure by the Locomotive company has been accompanied by the announcement of a new list following substantial reductions. The greatest interest in the show is in the Pierce-Arrow. It is said that this car can now be purchased for $5,000 less than the old [illegible] improvements, making it more adapted to American conditions. The Alco, the Pierce line, excepting the cab, will be represented by the Alco and Waldorf. There will be a polished chassis of the new six-cylinder car, more powerful than ever, and the four-cylinder forty horsepower four-cylinder touring car which made the town car in particular is about the "swell" creation to be seen anywhere.

KENYON AND COTE GO SIX FAST ROUNDS

Dexter, Me., Jan. 2.—Jack Kenyon of Guilford and Max Cote of Biddeford went six fast rounds in the town hall this evening. Honors were about even and a large crowd was well entertained. In the semi-final Kid Slater and Young Brown went four fast rounds and in the first preliminary Jack Frazier and Reddy Hargadon fought four round journeys. Honors were in favor of Morgridge.

BOXERS FLOCK TO NEW YORK LOOKING FOR BATTLES.

Opening of Game in Gotham Will Surely Be Good Thing for the Mitt Artists.

BY TAD.

New York, Jan. 2.—Now that the boxing game is to be opened once more in New York, we may expect to see some champ dawning who will be bustling for titles within a year

Last year we developed a few here who fizzled well with the wonders of the different classes, and now that ten round bouts are to be run off, the best boys of the East will surely work out

There is no class in pugilism which is overburdened with claimants for the title, but within the next six months we should have two or three lads here who will be worthy of giving any champion a run for his title

In the bantam class there is Young Kelley, Johnny Daly and Kid Murphy. Then in the featherweight division we have Abe Attell and "Knockout" Brown, a lad who is now in training for a bout with Young Corbett, Jr., at Dreyfus in the near future. Both these boys are willing to meet the best in the land, and they are willing to meet each other. Then there are Joe Gans, Joe Shugrue, Joe Bonds and Jack Robinson. We can't expect them to trim Langford, but they could give a few with the white lads. In the lightweight class are only a couple—Jeannette Schlaifer, who would do; but who's waiting for Young Loving Arthur to roll over again?

Related this from the grand old man of Massachusetts, Mike (Twin) Sullivan:

"Cambridge, Mass.

"The New York

"Happy New Year, Ted. Would like to bet Willie Lewis at National Club.

"MIKE TWIN SULLIVAN.

"Welterweight champ."

Had Broad spent all of New Year's Day trying to say this just: "She stood there, with a big kiss in at the gate."

A Western writer comes out now with a story that Burns was double-crossed by Johnson.

Maybe Burns was more than that from the looks of his map next day.

Young Otto, that very dangerous lightweight who perished in this town, is going to Europe on the 16th of this month.

Young Peter Jackson from Australia was a champion, never was seen a scrapper since those days, but we should like to see one who will give him a chance!

Welsh and McFarland passed him up. They would rather fight Langford, so go to fill and here in New York the scrappers are just as eager to get at him. Ohio has one right hand slam that has been shortened to deck.

It may get the winner of that Britt-Summers go in London early next month

Stanley Ketchel, middleweight champion of the world, has been spending the holidays with his folks up in Michigan and he is now in a few days.

Ketch has a bunch of trouble on his mind these days. A dark man from Boston, by the name of Langford, is training him, and there's only room for one of it and that's a "Brodie" off the Brooklyn Bridge. Major Ketch is coming to Jake Kilrain at the "Road to Yesterday," as some of them call the Hub.

Poor Al Kaufman! Just as he was developing into a world's champion, along comes a man named Harry and starts right in nine rounds with him Langford knocked Harry out in two rounds.

Life is a sad saw Al, all ups and downs

The Jeffries fight promoters have offered Marvin Hart $10,000 to fight Jack Johnson and Marvin is considering the offer. It's a telegram from Louisville. Considering is correct.

Battling Nelson had to retire in order to get into a good hotel here. Even then he got was a shower bath in the dressing room. Now that he's retired he can get a room inside with a wash bowl, a pass and small joint.

EVERETTS LOSE HARD GAME

FATE OF GRAND CIRCUIT DECIDED THIS MONTH

Stewards Will Hold Annual Meeting in New York—Eastern End of Circuit Doubtful.

By Ed Cogswell.

Will the Grand Circuit of 1909 be a reality, or will so many of the tracks in the Eastern end of the circuit drop out that the famous chain of racing associations from Detroit to Lexington, which for about thirty years has been the Mecca of the light harness horse enthusiasts, become a matter of history only?

This is the question that horsemen are asking as the annual meeting of the stewards of the Grand Circuit is scheduled for this month in New York. J. M. Johnson, president of the body, and, too, of the New England Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, is certain to claim dates for Readville, when the stewards' meeting of the Breeders' Association at Young's Hotel, next January 6, is voted to. On none of Readville through it having been impossible to raise the $100,000 in bonds to save the property.

In the West the prospects were never brighter than now. This was attested by the Great Western Circuit recently handing out a programme of seventeen weeks' racing, and a total of right onto half a million dollars to be given in stakes and purses.

Detroit Will Lead Off.

For the Grand Circuit Detroit is a certainty for the leading off point, as usual, on July 26. Advices from Cleveland are to the effect that the new track at Randall will be ready for the second meeting in the circuit. Then there's Kalamazoo, not big for its meeting, which is booked for third place in the list.

This brings the project down to the cities not so positive of again taking part. Buffalo is doubtful. If it is possible for the promoters to secure the Fort Erie track, which is located across the line in Canada, where betting on the results of the races is assured, the Buffalo name is reunited in coming in the week following Kalamazoo. But the Niles fair ground seems in securing the track from the running horse people, who may feel like holding their meeting on the same dates, as was the case the past season when they conflicted against the harness meeting at Kenilworth.

Reports from Poughkeepsie are none encouraging, as the regular meeting is to be held if the efforts in saving Readville track are successful, but the same early-closing stakes and purses of last year will be given.

Readville is Doubtful.

Readville, here is a sticker Mr Johnson makes the statement that he has been able to date in getting subscribers for the full bond issue, the amount said being quite a little short of the sum required. However, he is not down hearted on this matter, feeling that he will accomplished wonders when it is considered that he has been alone in getting horsemen interested in the saving of Readville. With more time he has in the bond will be subscribed, and it is likely will be his motion at the stewards' meeting to have operations regarding the track postponed to February 15, the date set for the election of officers.

Mr Johnson, if the sand for delay is given will claim the Grand Circuit dates, as under the rules of the circuit race track has till April 1 in which to withdraw from the scheduled dates allotted.

Providence is out of the circuit; the track, so the story goes, being transformed into an automobile course with a cement surface. Hartford will take its regular dates, but the Grand Circuit program will be rather a light one if the present plan of holding only two days for the light harness horses goes through. It appears the open ng day will be devoted to the trotters, among the events being the Charter cup trot of this sport and the multitudinous the second day will be the pacing races, while the last couple of days the horse show and running races will be the feature.

Baltimore May be Added.

Baltimore is expected to apply for dates to come between Hartford and Syracuse. Last year they got a denial for their claim, but matters are somewhat different now from then. Baltimore should make a good addition to the circuit.

From this point along the Grand Circuit is strong in favor of there being five New York State Fair at Syracuse. Five will, of course, mean two weeks of racing as the case of Readville through it having been impossible to raise the $100,000 in bonds to save the property.

In the West the prospects were never brighter than now. This was attested by the Great Western Circuit recently handing out a programme of seventeen weeks' racing, and a total of right onto half a million dollars to be given in stakes and purses.

SUMMER BASEBALL BOTHERS COLLEGIANS

Representatives From Many Faculties Will Make No Exception in Amateur Clause.

New York, Jan. 2.—Summer baseball and the schools which countenance this form of sport are the base of the Intercollegiate Athletic Association. The control of this sport and the multitudinous reforms suggested occupied nearly all the time of the annual meeting of the organization held today at Murray Hill Hotel

The good and evil points of this sport were argued by sources from many faculties and it was finally unanimously decided that the amateur clause should apply to all forms of amateur sports, which means that college men who play summer baseball are going to rope in for some mighty close scrutiny next season.

Now York Athletic Club, Chicago Athletic Association, Pastime Athletic Club of Philadelphia, Georgetown University, Georgetown, D. C., Lafayette, Penn., State College, Lehigh University, Pa.; University of North Carolina, Agricultural Technical college of North Carolina and Iowa State College

New Committees.

A committee was appointed to consider the amateur law and form a definite statement to apply to collegiate athletics. Another committee was appointed on rules and to see about the legalizing as to allowance roughness in basketball and secure a uniform set of rules. The subject of the proper control of all college sports was referred to another committee

Football was also a topic for some discussion. In this sport, conditions were reported as being satisfactory and the football committee was directed to proceed along the same lines as in former years. The appointment of new committees to deal with the selection of a new governing body to adopt a uniform set of rules in track athletics

Officers were elected as follows: Ralph P. E. Pierce, West Point, president; Prof. W. Skaggs, Illinois, vice-president; Prof. F. W. Nichols, Yale, secretary; Professor Dudley Sargent, Harvard, executive committee; Prof. Dudley Allen Sargent, Cambridge, Mass.; Prof. Thos. Prof. Louis N. Wettmore, Columbia University; Prof. Wm. Lowe Bryan, University of Missouri; Louis Bevier, Rutgers College, N. J.

The issue of sanctioning baseball in college athletics was raised in a debate on the question "Any student in good college standing should be permitted to play in interscholastic baseball contests." Prof. John P. Welsh of Penn Agricultural College and Prof. H. G. Chase of Tufts College, took the affirmative while Prof. K. J. Hartnett of Dartmouth and Prof. A. A. Stagg of Chicago University opposed the proposition. The final disposition of the matter, making the amateur clause cover this form of college sport was consigned to unanimously by the delegates.

MAY DRIVE CRESCEUS.

Toledo, O., Jan. 2.—George H. Ketcham has received a flattering offer to drive Creseus in the International Stakes at St. Petersburg on Jan. 23. The horse was owned by Ketcham up to two years ago, when he was sold to Colonel Tshemsen, who is now trying to induce the noted horseman from Toledo to come to Russia to take part in the event named. Thus far Mr. Ketcham has not given his answer.

HUGH MACLEAN BEATS WILLS IN BIG BIKE RACE

In Hard Tussle of Twenty Miles Local Rider Finishes Before Briton.

American brawn and speed possessed by Hugh MacLean were too much for Edward Albert Wills, the pigeon English bike racer, when the pair met in their twenty mile match duel behind the motors at the Park square indoor track last night, and the Yankee champ won out by almost two laps.

It was the biggest triumph yet for the peerless American pace follower, as the victory gives him a good claim as the champion of the world, since honor it would draw him after seeing him force the classy Wills to taste defeat by greater riding ability.

MacLean really won the race on a technicality when four miles was covered, as in the fifth mile Wills broke two wheels and no other to continue on Lew agreed to allow a mile to get back on the game in case of an accident, but Wills was not out of business entirely with no wheel at hand.

Race Stopped With MacLean Ahead.

At the time MacLean had a quarter of a lap lead the race was stopped. Another event was put on and then the riders were called out to proceed with the race where it was left off with MacLean holding his slight lead.

It was sportsmanlike in MacLean to keep in the race which he had won because of Wills misfortune, but he did not want to take the laurels with any stain attached to them so in a sportsmanlike way he consented to give the Englishman a chance to beat him if he could.

Once again in the running Wills managed a fast clip, but MacLean was out to clinch a victory which would leave no doubt of his superiority, and got going like the wind in the fifteenth mile he circled the track at express speed, coughs up with his rival and passed him amid a storm of cheers. After that the Englishman was outclassed and never had it in him to give MacLean much pressure, managed to keep him from passing front again.

MacLean Hits Up Pace.

The first start was a good one, with both on opposite sides of the track. When the third mile was announced MacLean, who hit out the pace from the pistol and kept gaining, was ready to go past Wills.

The Britisher dipped his motor sul dently and changed wheels, as his own was disabled MacLean gained about half a mile in the meantime, but Wills got going again inside of the mile.

Then caused a pretty breach Wills and the pole, refused to let MacLean circle him and Hugh was obliged to fall in behind.

There was a report like a pistol and Wills went sprawling on the track, the result of a wheel exploding and he was left without equipment, but not seriously hurt. MacLean tore off a few laps and then was called from the track.

They started from the former positions, when Wills, on a Merkel, with Hugh behind which he held to the end at increased by a lap.

Anderson's Fine Race.

Anderson a win in the ten-mile open was a giddy bit of riding. On the last mile Pat Logan went out three laps down the finish and got a big lead, but the field closed in on him with a rush.

The Dane led the charge and on the final lap went to the front closely pursued by the Bedell Brothers. He held on to the finish line getting the prize by a safe margin, but it was close for the other three places as a blanket would have covered the three riders. M Bedell lost second and John and Logan was third.

Peter Drabeck won the mile pro-handicap from the 50-yard mark by a fine burst of speed and flustered the New Yorker kept up his winning streak in the open amateur race The summary

New York, Jan. 2.—Dolando, the famous old "beef and bean champion," is dead. As a three-year-old he was purchased by John Meehan for $100, and after that he won many races, always receiving the Dean meal support of Pork row. Later Dolando was sold to Tom Welsh, and in recent years he was seen dragging a barrow at the Gravesend track.

JOHNSON IS A WONDER GUS RUHLIN DECLARES.

Doesn't See Anybody Who Has a Show With Colored Champion.

New York, Jan. 2.—Gus Ruhlin, who once fought Jim Jeffries a twenty-round draw and defeated Tom Sharkey twice, says:

Jack Johnson can beat Jim Jeffries Sharkey's offer to fight the negro is a joke. Johnson could lick him in much quicker time than he did Burns."

In fact, Johnson is invincible as far as the present crop of heavyweights is concerned

The Akron giant, who was among the stars of the heavyweight division only a few years back, is now a saloonkeeper over at No. 1490 Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn. He has dropped out of the public eye gradually, but he is still a fighter, or at least one would think so, to hear him talk to-day. Ruhlin has filled up over the published statement that Tom Sharkey worked up to a patriotic frenzy and a monthly for negroes, has announced h himself as ready for the championship to the white race

Laughs at Sharkey.

Sharkey fight Johnson?" Ruhlin asked. Why, not a million years," he answered. The sailor is simply four flushing. Why, he won't look around for any Johnsons. He eats when he can get an opponent under any old conditions and at any old time." So saying, Ruhlin dished out another bit of soup to a hungry customer, grasped the forty pounds of an enthusiastic German by a handshake of recognition and stretched over for the same great delight.

"Sharkey," he continued, "it best him myself and you can bet your life me caught me a chance punch and dropped me in a round or two, but that is just the way he knows it. I saw him before my fight in England and I saw him after it and he was no nearer boxmasts on the side. We finally compromised on a $2,500 purse aside but just before the fight, after I had put up the cash and before I entered the ring, Jack Scriggs, Sharkey said he wouldn't fight unless the bet was called off. He said he wanted to call the bet off, but rather than lose the fight I said to cut it out. I beat the sailor then by seven rounds."

Ruhlin then went into the attempt to force Jeff into the ring with Johnson. "Why, supposing Jeffries was reasonably sure of beating the negro, wouldn't he take a chance?" he asked. "Jeff has been out of the game four years, and is now a big, soft fellow, weighing nearly 300 pounds. He has a lot of money, and is well fixed with a big moneymaking farm, a profitable hotel and an interest in a good fight club. If he won a fellow that didn't keep anything, maybe I wouldn't blame him for taking a chance to get the coin in a fight with Jo Jeff.

But the big fellow doesn't have to take that chance, and it would be a tough chance at that.

"Jeff as a fighter came very fast," continued Ruhlin, "and he is just as good as he ever was, but Jeff was good and old when he fought Munroe. Right at that time we never have had a good chance with Johnson, but now, why there is really a good chance for a white boy to beat the negro."

Did he ever was say did if he knew of any one with a chance of beating the negro, and promptly replied, "No."

"How about yourself? Would you fight Johnson?"

"Not on your life; but I'll fight Sharkey."

Johnson a Wonder.

"This fellow Johnson is a wonder," Ruhlin went on. "He is a faster one with his head and hands than Corbett ever was, and I always thought Corbett was the fastest and cleverest fighter I ever saw. Corbett was faster on his feet than Johnson. He was more clever and there is a difference.

"How did McCoy in his palmy days compare with Johnson?

"McCoy," Ruhlin thought. "McCoy was a wicked strategic fighter who took every known advantage to beat a man. He always tried to hit so as to cut a man up. I had a hard fight with McCoy, but would always try to land a punch on the same spot and then I did. I once managed to make it worse. McCoy was the kind of a fighter who would hit the kneecap a man dazed with a punch if he could

"Johnson is a manly fighter who himself justice when he fought Johnson," said Ruhlin, "and I don't see anybody who can, or will, think they are as good as ever and would like to match themselves with Johnson. He trained hard for Johnson, but he left his training table and stepped right into the ring. When he got into the ring Johnson was the best young negro he was ever really beaten

"I don't see the ground open or I don't see anybody who has a chance of beating the negro. Why, a few years ago Billy Madden told me he was the coming champion and Madden had him right.

"But, say, don't forget to tell Sharkey if he is serious to fight that I am still on the job."

Ruhlin positively exhibits in his windows the gloves he wore when he fought Jeff a draw and those that beat Sharkey.

BOHEMIAN BULL TO MEET CARL OLSEN

Wrestling fans, who appreciate to the full the good and bonny fight that Gaston Feron of the Columbia has been serving up to his patrons of late, are anxiously looking forward to the match to be held Wednesday night, which is expected to be something that will make everyone sit up and take notice. Joe Hosek the Bohemian Bull, will clash with Carl Olsen the Great Swede, and as there are of them of the same weight, close to 240 pounds apiece, and both are coming with good reputations, a well balanced match is looked for. Hosek is a new man to wrestling fans in this section, but has been doing good work in the West coast, Savannah and elsewhere. Olsen will make his initial bow as a matman in Wednesday and such a good judge as Landin pronounces him a wonder. The match will be catch-as-catch-can style, best two out of three falls.

NO FREAK CARS TO BE SEEN AT PALACE SHOW

It's a Practical Auto Exhibit and One of the Best Ever Held in This Country.

New York, Jan. 2.—So far as can be seen there will be no freak cars at the big motor show in the Grand Central Palace, which opened its doors to the public this afternoon. Hundreds of motor cars are on exhibition, and not one of them is a freak. What the motor vehicle is coming to—the natural dispatch that the automobile is making toward more comfort, more appearance of the fact that the motor is a necessity and not a luxury—is what might be termed a forecast of the ideas that in the near future will be incorporated in the construction of the motor car.

FINANCIAL

STOCKS BUOYANT AS NEW YEAR OPENS

Bullish Sentiment in Boston Trading Gives Encouragement for Coming Month.

The market in Boston started the new year with a firm tone and prices showing fractional advances, while a drive at Bos Fee Electric caused it to break 2¼ points during the two hours' trading.

As it Pur... was a quiet yester da., and the New York cotton, Coffee and Produce exchanges also, there were traders and brokers who, not wishing to spoil a three days' holiday, remained away and little interest was shown, considering the buoyant tone of the markets of New York, Boston and London.

The advance in the price of copper last week was reflected on the local board by the copper shares which were the leaders. Granby and Cercolo advanced a full point in the first hour, and were followed by Amalgamated and Green Cananea, which were both firm on good buying. Amalgamated was bought by New York houses as was Green, but the buying of the latter was not significant.

The selling for the day was scattered and was reported selling orders more or less stopped this buying.

In the general list there were some in Petrol issues, the most conspicuous being a rise of four points in Mexico Pump, two points in Edison Electric and the two Edison Electric issues.

The advance in Brooklyn Rapid Transit in New York of 4¼, points also helped to counsel an advance for the stock on the local market of 1¾ on transactions of 300 shares.

Tennessee Copper also had a local advance of two points and the new offering in New York.

The local market which was shown by these prices and the general advance of stocks as were quoted indicates that the new year ... No financial disturbance is reflected by the Sterling exchange which, though the loss is estimated by the Italian government at $100,000,000.

The large sales of Electrolyte copper, made during the past three months when prices are now firmed, and producers are willing to insure against decline for the next three months, has placed that stock considered in a position of ... and in addition to the usual sum option and a considerable favorable for the world's copper position as compared with the year previous.

The decline in production was due to the long period of idleness at Butte, a cessation of operations at Green's agency for several months and minor reductions of operations at other mines. There is almost certain to be a further increase in production during the next three months, which should gradually work back to the normal ... months attained in the early part of 1907.

REVIEW OF REALTY FIELD AND OUTLOOK FOR COMING YEAR

REAL ESTATE

PROPERTY IN CITY COUNTRY AND SHORE IN STRONG DEMAND

PROSPERITY AIDS REALTY MARKET BIG BOOM FOR 1909

Home-Builders Already Placing Orders for Good Sites; What the Brokers Say.

By the Investigator.

Unanimous in the opinion that the year 1909 [illegible] of real estate [illegible] the most profitable that the real estate market has ever known, real estate brokers in the city have already forgotten the dull periods of business during the early part of 1908. The real estate Market of Greater Boston is on [illegible] at wave of activity and prosperity.

The opening of the year 1908 found the realty market poor because, as with every other line of business, it felt the full financial disturbance of the previous October and there was no market in the real estate [illegible] the past week [illegible] the year 1908 [illegible] the year 1907 [illegible] $47,000,000 [illegible] $47,000,000 [illegible] $47,000,000

NEW $1,000,000 DRY DOCK IN PLANS FOR BOSTON.

Move for Great Improvement Made Known at Produce Exchange Meeting.

SOCIETY HOST TO MAYOR

That Boston is soon likely to have a new million-dollar dry dock became known yesterday at the annual meeting of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange.

It was brought out by H. L. Bean, a prominent Boston commission merchant, the delegate of the exchange to the Massachusetts State Board of Trade.

"Boston is backward and way behind when it comes to adequate dry dock facilities for merchant vessels," he declared. "Prominent business men of Greater Boston are quietly looking into the matter, however, and it is possible that a big dry dock may be built here in the not distant future.

"There is absolutely no reason why we should not have another dry dock. One could be easily constructed in South Boston, for instance. The water is deep enough for the largest steamer afloat.

"At present we only have one dock and the government does not charge much. And that is the almost constant cry.

"If a million dollar dock is constructed and I have no doubt that it will before long—the bonds in my opinion could be readily disposed of."

State Board Takes Lead.

"One thing is certain, however, and that is that it would be a great boon for Boston's commercial and business interests."

His urged upon the members to take action in the matter, since the Massachusetts State Board of Trade had appointed a committee to look into the desirability and practicability of building a dock of sufficient capacity to berth the largest mercantile steamer afloat.

The meeting of the exchange was one of the most notable held, as not only were various men for boosting Boston broached, but an election of officers and a big banquet in honor of the retiring president, Mayor Hibbard and prominent speakers.

Francis Batchelder, a well-known provision and produce dealer, one time mayor of Everett, was elected president unanimously.

The other officers elected are

Arthur T. Cummings, fruit and vegetable dealer, first vice president; Harvey F. Sleeper, secretary and treasurer; Frank B. Cooper, fruit and vegetable dealer, second ward; H. Kimball, fruit and vegetable dealer, and Jesse A. Newcomb, produce dealer, directors for three years; Henry H. Learned, beef and provision dealer, director for two years; and William Ward, fruit and vegetable dealer, delegate to the Massachusetts State Board of Trade.

Mayor Hibbard was the guest of the exchange as an informal visitor, not presiding the business meeting. He received the greatest ovation of the evening. Last year's, when he was in office, he was also spoke at length on the work of the exchange in the development of business.

At the business meeting it was reported that the exchange has a membership of 267, the largest in the history of the organization.

A report by Fred S. Mead, chairman of the transportation committee, showed that the decrease in the value of imports and exports for the year ending June 30 over last year over a corresponding number of months for the year before was greater in Boston than in any other city in the country.

Committee Reports.

Reports were received from Fred H Loveland, delegate to the National River and Harbor Congress; President George W. Bacon and James H. York, chairman of special "sidewalk bill" committee; Fred H. Leland, chairman, and Frederic Merrill, H. L. Burr, delegates to Boston Manufacturers' Association; Fred H. Leland, chairman of committee on collections; H. L. Bean, delegate to Boston Wholesale Grocers' Association; Alexander H. Rice, chairman of committee on information; Joseph Noyes, committee on arbitration; Fred H. Loveland, chairman of committee on relief committee; Fred C. Mead, chairman of transportation committee, and Mrs. Gertrude Edwin Robinson of the Beneficiary Association, an auxiliary branch of the exchange.

Don't Blame Your Stomach

When Without Exertion Or Cost You Can Enjoy Meals And Cure Dyspepsia.

Don't blame your stomach or your back when your meals declare war on your system.

When the stomach won't do its work it is because it cannot.

When food smelling odors come from your stomach, when the head aches and the sourness of mouth every morning makes you hate your breakfast, when dizziness and nightmare assail you, don't give up the fight.

This is the appeal of nature, and it should be heard.

Over-eating, late suppers, poorly chewed food, too rich pastries and underdone cooking are some of the causes of the stomach's ill health

When the stomach is busy, it erases and churns all the liquid matter from food and with its juices dissolves that liquid form or pulp everything which comes into it.

If such food be poisonous, it affects the juices, attacks the blood, goes into the blood and weakens the entire system.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest a full meal easily without material assistance from the stomach They will correct the gastric fluid with all the elements needed. They build up the blood, destroy sour taste, bad breath, belching, stomach and bowel trouble, and quickly restore natural conditions.

One grain of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grain of food in the stomach or in a glass vial without aid of the human digestive apparatus.

The methods of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the methods of Nature.

They contain every requisite for the stomach and digestion. After a meal one of these tablets dissolves, scatters the stomach mingles with the juices, attacks the food and digests it. It removes the fermented and decayed mass lying stagnant there, and eases the stomach at once.

It is wholly a question for you to solve. Your druggist will furnish Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, 50c the box, or send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

CRISIS IN CHINA WITH OUSTING OF ARMY CHIEF.

Summary Dismissal of Yuan Shi Kai Causes Apprehension Among the Powers.

VICTIM OF MANCHU PLOT

Deposed Grand Councillor Known as the "Strong Man" of the Empire.

Pekin, Jan 2—A political crisis scarcely less momentous than that which immediately followed the recent deaths of the Emperor and the Dowager Empress, has been precipitated by the summary dismissal of Yuan Shi Kai, grand councillor and head of the Chinese army. The suite under which Prince Chun, the regent, attempted to conceal the action that of the physical infirmity of Yuan—has been thrown aside and it is now all but proved that the former grand councillor was the victim of a Manchu plot.

The reform element in China, of which Yuan is the recognized leader, is aroused over the day's imperial edict, and the situation is so acute that the foreign ministers, including Mr. Rockhill of America, have been in almost continuous conference since the diet was published in an effort to agree on a course of action.

Realizing that the modernists are likely to seize upon the startling development to affect, if to overthrow the political dynasty, the ministers are likely to urge the rescinding of today's action.

Today's action, it is now seen, is but a development of the anti-Manchu agitation that followed the elevation of Prince Chun to the regency and the infant Yu Ti to the throne.

This was considered an affront to the reform party, which is insisting on the re-establishment of a real Chinese dynasty.

Yuan was allowed to retain his positions of power out of fear that his expulsion at the time of the change in administration would seriously involve the new regime. Yuan has been called "China's strongest man." He has been aware for some time of the new development and is in a position to command a tremendous following should he decide to contest the authority of the regent.

The foreign element (the Chinese capital is in sympathy with the deposed official, almost to a man.

EX-SULTAN'S JEWELS TO BE SOLD AT AUCTION

French Pawnshop Holds Valuables of Former Moroccan Ruler.

Paris, Jan. 2—The Monte de Piete, the municipal pawnshop, will soon auction off the crown jewels and other jeweled belongings, pawned over a year ago by the deposed Sultan of Morocco. The ex-Sultan borrowed 1,260,000 francs ($250,000) on his jewelry from the Monte de Piece after a number of French bankers had refused to advance him money. At the time he agreed to pay 8 per cent. interest on the loan. He likewise agreed to redeem the pledges at the end of twelve months by the payment of interest and principle.

As he neglected to do so and as there is no prospect that he will return to Paris within the time allowance granted to municipal borrowers, the great pawnshop will be compelled by its by-laws to auction off the Morocco regalia.

WOMEN RISK FAIR SKIN IN ELECTRIC RAY TEST

High Prices Paid for Models in Experiments at Dresden.

Dresden, Jan. 2.—The Academy of Medicine at this university continues its investigations into the charge that electric light is ruinous to the skin, and elaborate experiments are conducted with highpriced models, for women taking the risk of having their fair complexions spoiled come high, even in the fatherland.

The contention of electrical experts is that the human skin, if momentarily exposed to electric light, deteriorates in whiteness and eventually turns to some degree of brownish Asiatic tint.

Here is the scientific explanation that the rose hues of health are attributed to the rays of sunlight, and that the pallid people will become tanned old ones by

EX-PRINCE GUEST OF LONDON MONASTERY

Father Haymund Held One of the Noblest Titles in Germany.

London, Jan. 2—An ex-prince, who wears the habit of a monk as a disguise, and the Domain as cloak, is a distinguished guest at a London monastery. "Father Raymund," a dignified though aged figure, was until about a year ago known to the world as Prince Lowenstein-Wertheim-Rosenberg, one of the noblest titles in Germany.

He has come to England to visit his sister and daughter, both of whom are nuns in a convent in the Isle of Wight. She sister is the widow of King Miguel of Portugal.

Duke Honored by Science.

Paris, Jan. 2.—The Duke de Broglie, father of the Prince de Broglie, who married and divorced Miss Estelle Alexander of San Francisco, has attained high distinction in the world of science. He has just received from the Paris University the degree of doctor of science, for a thesis on an electrical-chemical subject.

"Exalted Personage" Stops the Countess of Warwick's Book

Piquant Memoirs of English Society to Remain Unpublished Until a New Generation Has Arisen.

London, Jan 2—The Countess of Warwick's promised memoirs, which were to date been exceedingly outspoken and piquant, are not to be published. "An exalted personage" has intervened to prevent her ladyship's reminiscences and comments on English society being given to the world, and they will remain in manuscript probably until after her death and perhaps until a new generation has arisen.

People who love daring unrestrained gossip will be disappointed and many society people will be relieved to hear this news. The Countess had declared that in her memoirs she intended to portray English society exactly as she found it, sparing no one, whatever their rank, in her frank and indiscreet pictures of society. This is the world is deprived of a first class literary sensation.

HAIR WASH IS BAGGAGE, BRITISH JUDGE SAYS

Law Protects Public Against Corporations Even in Small Things.

London, Jan 2—As an instance of how thoroughly British law protects the interests of the public against powerful corporations, the decision of a London judge on an apparently trivial point in a railroad case is significant.

Frederick Davis, a lawyer, sued the Great Western Railway Company for damage to his baggage. The railroad had conveyed his valise, containing a dress suit, a bottle of hair wash and two bottles of medicine, in transit the bottles were smashed and the suit damaged by their contents.

The railroad company's lawyer argued that such goods as hair wash and medicines could not be classed as a passenger's personal baggage. But the judge held that the articles came within the definition of passengers' baggage, remarking that railway travelers would be very astonished if told that such things did not come within that category. He awarded Mr. Davis $25 damages against the railroad company.

RIVAL SINGERS WAR AT WAGNER PERFORMANCE

Frau Wittich and Frau Krull Spoil "Walkure" in Dresden.

Berlin, Jan. 2—Professional rivalry has led to an open war during a Wagnerian performance between two of the best known operatic singers in Germany.

Frau Wittich and Frau Krull, who have long been at daggers drawn, were to appear together in the Wagner at the Royal Opera House, Dresden, appearing in the roles of Brunhilde and Sieglinde respectively.

When they got to the scene where Sieglinde kneels before Brunhilde, Frau Krull remained on her seat looking truculently into her rival's face. Very soon the two singers were engaged in an unmusical dialogue which was not in the book, and which rapidly developed into an unedifying altercation.

In spite of a fortissimo passage from the orchestra, the quarreling was heard across the footlights and the curtain was rung down.

KAISER'S ART IDEAS CAUSE LIVELY DISPUTE

Postoffice Building in Darmstadt Stopped by Roof Plans.

Berlin, Jan. 2—The Kaiser's interference in art matters is again the cause of a lively dispute. Designs for a new postoffice at Darmstadt, approved by the Imperial Postal Department had been approved by the Grand Duke of Hesse (the local sovereign), but when it was submitted to the Kaiser he insisted that an entirely different roof should be adopted.

The municipality of Darmstadt and the Grand Duke of Hesse declare that the Kaiser's roof destroys the Postoffice's aesthetic grounds, and the Berlin Postal Department rejected it for technical reasons.

"BLACK OPAL" IS THE FAVORITE FREAK GEM

Stones of Unusual Color All the Rage in Jewelry Abroad.

London, Jan. 2—Jewelry formed of opals of unusually dark colors is the most fashionable form of gift. The favorite freak stone is the so-called "black opal," which is really not black but a dark blue, flecked with iridescent greens and flame color.

Other varieties of fresh popularity are pink and white topazes, red and yellow sapphires, and coral ranging in color from "dragon's blood" to cherry.

Black pearls are still far the very wealthy, as their price is prohibitive—perfectly matched gulf or black pearls costs at least $2,500.

STOUTNESS OF SINGERS EXPLAINED BY PHYSICIAN

Powerful Lungs Needed to Create Voice with Good Appetite.

Paris, Jan. 2.—Why opera singers are stout is now explained by a distinguished Paris physician.

"A powerful voice," he said, "requires voluminous lungs, well developed thorax and a large chest, and these conditions are produced by a high degree of generous physical proportions.

"It must also be remembered that famous singers are men with fetal appetites. They hardly ever walk, and being usually blessed with hearty appetites, it is not surprising if they accumulate and possess flesh."

WOLF-BEAR FOUND BY GILLETT IN TURKESTAN

Strange Hybrid Has a Weird Name Given to It by Natives.

London, Jan 2 Nature fakers will be interested in the discovery of a strange hybrid in Chinese Turkestan by Frederick Gillett, a vice-president of the Zoological Society, who describes it as resembling a bear in some respects and a wolf in the movements.

Gillett only saw the animal at a great distance through field glasses. His native guides gave it the name of "Ghoul," but never heard before, and which was neither the native word for wolf or bear. They added that the creature was very rare in those parts.

CASTRO SMARTING UNDER SLIGHT AT HANDS OF KAISER.

Venezuelan Amateur Napoleon Thought Himself the Guest of Wilhelm.

GEORGE ADE DISCOURAGED

BY VANCE THOMPSON.

Special Cable to Boston American.

Paris, Jan 2—Senor Castro, the amateur Napoleon of South America, is a much disheartened man in Berlin. The American correspondent learns from one who has been with Castro constantly in the German capital, that when Castro arrived in Europe it was practically upon no less an invitation than that of Eugene William of Germany. Castro, fearing the opposition which his discoveries of the asphalt trust's irregularities had brought him in the American Government, and gaining the enmity of the Dutch by exposing their colonial smuggling system, concluded to seek the good offices of Emperor William to restore him to favor with his enemies and as a step offered William a commercial treaty with certain valuable trade privileges long desired by Germany, which the Emperor grabbed at with delight, through the German minister. The suggestion of an invitation was given Castro from the Emperor; not a real invitation, but as much as diplomacy would permit; so Castro, light-hearted, came to Berlin, started on a cruise, but imperial interviews were not considered in the progressive dictation of William and Castro, so when the latter arrived at the German frontier he was surprised at the change of heart of the Emperor, who sent him not so much as a whispered welcome.

Royalty's "Near-invited" Guest.

The Emperor reconsidered his proposed alliance in the line of the developments caused by the published interview, and evidently thought that he was sufficiently unpopular with the German people not to risk anything more; so Castro, a royal near-invited guest, is a cruising if not ward circumstances, ignored by his intended imperial host.

The lieutenant of the American says that Castro is most anxious to return home, and that he is constantly receiving away from his country, however turbulent its affairs may be.

George Ade reached the Cafe de Paris yesterday with a haunted look, closing down exhaustedly on the corner of a correspondent, and said: "I've escaped at last, thank goodness. I've been on the roughest channel passage ever known to get away from a party of interviewers. Why, those English had such a depressing effect upon me that I fear I've lost my ability to smile, and as for a humorous expression, I'm one animal I'm thankful to be again among people who show some evidence of human feeling and emotion."

Ade is stopping here with Ort Wells, John W. Gates and Jim Hyde, all well known around the world. He leaves for Berlin Sunday. Ade is suffering severely under the insult of the royal slight, as well as ordinary.

LICENSED PILLAGE FOUND IN RUSSIAN GRAFT PROBE

General Dismissed as Head of Moscow's Police Worked System of Blackmail.

BRIGANDS HAD PROTECTION

St. Petersburg, Jan. 2—Amazing revelations of graft and corruption in the highposts of the Russian police are made as a result of the government's inquiry into the scandals at Batoum and Wilno.

General Reinbot, who has been dismissed from his post as prefect of police, at Moscow, is accused of graft on a large scale. Among other things, he is said to have taken extensive sums of money for collected opium, from gambling houses from which alone he is said to have received $40,000, $15,000, and $10,000 respectively.

But the prefect of Moscow is not the only official who is charged with grafting. Heads were recently torn from the police department in Batoum, from the local post office and from the office of customs, resulting in the discovery of gross wholesale blackmail. A man who made big profits bought the positions of the police chiefs.

Photographs who attempted to expose the gang were dismissed, and others who attempted to follow the clue of their movements were warned. No arrests followed however.

The latest operations of the Wilno gang are described as exposed by the police. These officials, police were discovered to be in league with the brigands, supplying them with arms, ammunition and forbidden literature, and sharing in the profits of the trade. It was a case of connivance and profit to the official, who had such a good thing that he wished it to continue.

There is no reason to suppose that the interest of the police in the gang was lessened by the fact that Prince Rebutof Kropotkin, one of the members of the gang, was the son of a former governor of Moscow.

The Batoum affair is said to have been other of a similar character, the chief officials, who operated on an even larger scale than the Moscow officials.

The grafting scandal comes from Japanese invasion, the Russian-Japanese loan, the Russian-Japanese war, and the Russian-Japanese peace. Japan is accused of having squandered the money received from the loan to purchase good wines in Siberia.

GEN. BUTLER PAYS NOTABLE TRIBUTE TO PARNELL.

Irish race. His blood was neither Celtic nor Catholic; it was English and Protestant. He belonged to a class which had represented ascendancy in Ireland for so many generations. He was born to rule. He was a gentleman to the tips of his fingers.

He was of the coolest courage and of a foresight which in some directions was more than the range of vision which his native mountain top commanded. He saw Ireland on one side and England on the other, and he knew the depths of the sea that lay between them and the strength and direction of the current and cross-currents that swept there. He was a leader who knew how to conquer. He did not tell the Irish people that they were a race of peasantry in the word, but that they were men and had rights. He knew that to attempt to do that and fail to any man to attempt to do it and succeed was the same thing. It was to plant the Irish peasantry on Irish soil and to bring back the Irish Parliament to College Green.

He felt knew that justice, truth, reason, right and honor were worth fighting for, and scale when against those high-souled a armed blackguardism, as represented by the knew law could become the handmaid of privileges and that power could be used to compel terms. The question before Parliament was this, that power of gold, that power of hand, to beat down this power of the purse, this citadel of privilege? In the decade of inventions things looked staid in English politics. Even the London Times was defied with things as they stood in its day. The Franco-Prussian war had left Europe in a flood of gold into England. It was of this sedate, well-ordered and eminently gentlefied and respectable society of English politics that Parnell was the champion. A member to the middle of the seventies. The great tragedy which was to carry bad and of Eng and that nothing in present day in the history of English life than what he called the brutalizing of her present state as to the Irish. That showed that Victor Hugo had examined the moral and historical life down to the bedrock of her old Devonian formation.

A Protest Against Pretence.

"Almost the first words uttered by Parnell in the House of Commons was a protest against the English pretence. An English member had spoken of the agitation for the amnesty of the Irish dynamite murderers. A cry of 'No, no,' uttered by a single member, was heard in other parts of the House. It was Parnell who had spoken that cry, and he interrupted, amidst the first note of defiance and defiance which was soon to ring out upon that platform and in Parliament.

"The next two years before Parnell uttered at Manchester had not committed murder in the moral sense of that term. declared General Butler in a loud burst of applause followed these words. The lecturer continued:

"That law which condemned them as murderers was not the law of God nor the conscience which the great French thinker had referred to as the Intelligence of the Irish history. When called upon to withdraw the epithet, Parnell refused, and said quietly, and without trace of passion, 'I shall not withdraw it, for I do not that I do not believe, and never shall believe, that any murder was committed at Manchester.'

"From Parnell's point of view," said Sir William Butler, "all the evils that had befallen Ireland, all the misgovernment and wrongs that oppressed her, had their origin and their continuance in the want of parliamentary institution of which he was by common consent the great champion and by her. It was easier to find the cause of the Irish misery than to discover the plan by which the enemy could be met and defeated. The cause was the want of the highest morality of the word, a despot, a despot who was not a tyrant, who was as much the slave as Carlin and Russia and other great thinkers had looked at it. He saw that it devoted nothing to

ACROSS WORLD IN 22 DAYS BY BLACKSOD BAY ROUTE

Development of Irish Seaport May Make Startling Changes in Traffic Schedules.

Dublin, Jan. 2.—Across the world in twenty-two days, with Blacksod Bay, on the west coast of Ireland, as the Grand Gateway to Europe, is the project just now engaging the minds of practical, hard-headed men in Australia, Canada, Ireland and Great Britain.

It is in all its features the most interesting, far-reaching and, so far as future development can be gauged, stupendous transit idea that has yet claimed international attention. It obtained new form and impetus in official reports to-day.

If the scheme be carried into execution, not only will Jules Verne and his fictitious Circuit of the Globe pale away in the mists of contemptuous slowness, but the Suez Canal route will lose its prestige as a short cut around the globe.

Across the world in twenty-two days! That is the dominating note back of the project. Here are the details in the main:

Harbor at Blacksod Bay.

If a map be looked at it will be seen that the northwest corner of Ire and juts out far into the Atlantic and is the point of European departure in the continent of North America. The proposed harbor at Blacksod Bay is situated in the county of Mayo. Eighty miles to the southward lies Galway. The nearest railroad to Blacksod Bay from Dublin is the Great Southern and Western railway, which runs from Dublin to Galway. Also from Dublin Kerry and the south. Dublin to Ardrossan, Scotland, is the shortest line from Ireland to the mainland, and from Ardrossan to London is the fastest railway service in the United Kingdom. Therefore, from Dublin to Blacksod Bay, and from Blacksod Bay to London, would involve the shortest possible railroad haul.

Either one of these ports the "transferry" would be located and the two would be connected by a railroad from Dublin to Patrick or Stranraer in the county of Wigtown, Scotland. A fast train ferry would cross this strip of water in two hours. Another train service would run from Stranraer to London, via the Midland railway, and the connection would be as rapid as steam transportation could make it.

With this fresh route for rapidly crossing the Atlantic established and in successful operation, the journey from London to Australia would be reduced to seven days.

Across Ocean in Three Days.

A letter or passenger starting from London at 7 p. m. on June 1 would arrive at Queenstown, the boat at Blacksod Bay at 9 o'clock on the morning of June 3, and at 10 a. m. and making twenty-five knots an hour, would reach Halifax at 7 p. m. on June 6. Adding time for reducing the Atlantic to a day, the total would be 7 days.

The time for the run from Halifax to Vancouver would be 4 days, 13 hours, and the run from Vancouver to Sydney, Australia, would be 7 days. Adding a day for the Pacific, the total would be 12 days.

The time for the run from Sydney to Auckland, New Zealand, would be 4 days, and from Auckland to Sydney 4 days, 13 hours, making twenty-five hours and a half. Adding a day for the Pacific, the total would be 7 days.

Adding time for reducing the Atlantic to a day, the total would be 7

MRS. ERB, ON STAND, TELLS HOW SISTER SLEW HUSBAND.

Story of Shocking Treatment at Captain's Hands Astounds All in Court.

STRUGGLE FOR REVOLVER

MEDIA, Pa., Jan. 2—With densely packed crowd in the Delaware county court room listening with breathless attention, and the twelve jurors leaning forward in their seats to catch every word, Mrs. Mary Pinney told related to-day an astounding tale of cruel treatment at the hands of her murdered husband, Captain J. Clinton Erb, and defended her sister, Mrs. Catherine Lobel, for turning a revolver upon him on the night of October 6, and slaying him in the hall of his country home, "Red Gables."

The pale faced widow, with girlish figure and youthful features, who with Mrs. Beisel is accused of plotting the death of Captain Erb, kept in the main to the outline of events at "Red Gables" as given yesterday by one of her attorneys in his opening speech to the jury. It was only an outline, however, a skeleton, of the tale that was unfolded by her to-day.

Rushing at her one evening at the dinner table and giving her terrific blows with both fists in the face, her husband had rendered her unconscious, she said, and caused her to spend days in a hospital. Time after time she was rendered insensible by one of her husband's onslaughts, going to administrations or other receipts. On one occasion she accused her husband of trying to poison him, and threatened to do with death, she fled to the Virginia Hot Springs

Describes the Tragedy.

Describing the tragedy, Mrs. Erb's narrative was as follows, led on by the questions of counsel:

"When you got your sister to the telephone, what did you say to her?"

"I said: 'Mister, the captain is drunk and in a terrible rage. He is abusing me terribly. Please come to me at once.'"

"Did she come?"

"Yes, she came over and I told her that I was afraid of my life. She said she couldn't stay there at all night, that she did not want to see him any more with the captain. My sister then asked me to accompany her to the lower house, which I did so she would leave me in the house. I asked her to wait until I got my things and slipped across to the bathroom."

"When I was in the bathroom I heard a loud noise and my sister called that the captain was broking up for the night but when I opened the bathroom door he confronted me with a revolver. He cursed me and ordered me to get out of the house. He then made as though to shoot and I screamed and ran with him after me.

"The captain was overtaking me when my sister came out of the room and interfered. His seemed to have never surprised and asked her what she was doing there. When my sister demanded that he let me alone he shouted at her, 'You devil, I will get rid of you, too.' With that he started for her and struck her.

"Mrs. Beisel dodged under his arm, as she did so caught at the hand holding the revolver. As she did so the revolver went off. They then talked all about the room.

Struggled for Revolver.

"Finally he got her up against the door of the bathroom and pinned her there. Both had hold of the revolver and I could see plainly that my husband was trying to raise the muzzle of the pistol so that he could get it pointed squarely at her head. I pulled with all my might. There was no question then the captain had decided to kill my sister. I knew that I must get it away from him. Finally he stumbled.

"I could not say how or why it was, he seemed to lose his balance and then tried to regain it by catching at my sister. She now had hold of the revolver with both hands while he had retained only his grip on the handle.

"Finally I saw my sister with a supreme effort wrest the revolver from the captain's grasp and point it at his head. She fired five shots, three of which cut him. I saw my sister pull the trigger and everything turned black before my eyes as I thought she had shot me. The captain was retreating towards the room and I did not know if he was hurt, or, if so, how badly.

"For a little while I sat cowering in the bathroom. Then my father's love for struggle having subsided, I crawled over to the door. I saw my sister standing there toward the entrance of the bathroom with his head in a pool of blood. He was still as though he were dead.

Sister Was in a Faint.

"I ran down stairs as fast as I could, crying: 'Get a doctor, get a doctor as quick as you can. Sister has shot the captain.' When I got down stairs I found Beatrice Mattrull in a deep swoon and when we got up there we carried her to them on the floor and my sister lying unconscious a few distance away from him. I ran over to the telephone and tried to get a doctor, but could not reach him. Then I asked Beatrice to keep on phoning while I went to see what condition sister was in. She was in a faint, and I at first thought she was dead. I listened to her heart and found that it was beating. I got a big sponge from the bathroom and managed to revive her. When she was able, with my help, to take a seat on the bed, she was very much distressed with her experience, but the doctor gave her some medicine when he came."

BETROTHAL REVEALS ROMANCE OF U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Old College Day Speech of E. Mark Sullivan Wins Heart and Hand of Former Radcliffe Girl.

A romance of a delightful college flavor has just come to light in the announcement of the engagement of E. Mark Sullivan, Assistant United States District Attorney, to Miss Katherya C. Sullivan of Newton Upper Falls.

Mr. Sullivan is a polished orator and one of the rising young legal lights of the Essex County bar. His brilliant political speaking, it is said, was responsible for his advancement in the District Attorney's office. His oratory at college was responsible for his acquaintance with the fiancee of the same name.

Mr. Sullivan when asked about his engagement was inclined to be reticent. He said that Miss Sullivan was in the city and that he would prefer to have any statement to be made to the public come through her. Friends of the young couple have already sent many congratulations. Miss Sullivan is a teacher in the schools of her home city.

The romance dates back to the day E. Mark Sullivan graduated from Boston College in 1905. He was one of the best speakers they turned out of that institution. Famous for its oratory graduates. His oration on the day of his graduation attracted the attention of Miss Sullivan, then a Radcliffe girl.

"That is a fine looking young Sullivan," remarked Miss Katherya to a friend. "I wonder if he is any relation to me."

They decided to find out and the two Sullivans met. They liked each other from the start. Mr. Sullivan went to Harvard Law School for three years, but couldn't resist going to see his fiancee every week-end. The latter is also a graduate of Radcliffe.

After his graduation Mr. Sullivan entered the law office of Assistant Attorney White of Salem. His oratory soon made him known and he was quite equal, especially in the political campaigns. He put into the United States District Attorney's office and was within a year advanced to second assistant.

Mr. Sullivan is a Republican and lives at 1,998 Dorchester avenue, Dorchester, with Mrs. Sullivan, mother of Katherya, when each at her home. Said this to say:

"I did not know that it had been settled. My daughter is with friends in New York at present. I am sorry that it is attracting so much attention."

Miss Sullivan possesses a handsome reputation in the faculty.

BENTON ASKS MORE MONEY FOR LIBRARY

Attorney Josiah H. Benton, chairman of the Board of Trustees of Boston Public Library, told the Beacon Society last night that more money for the library means the ultimate security of property. He also declared that the Boston Public Library "cannot supply more time." It must go forward or fall behind.

Mr Benton was speaker at the annual dinner of the Beacon Club, which took place at the Algonquin Club. He gave an extended account of the library's progress and work and then said, in speaking of its rapidly increasing needs, that the appropriation of $400,000 for 1908 for the library, should have been at least $500,000 and $600,000.

"I know the sum I have named is a large sum of money, but it is only 1-85th of one per cent of the tax valuation of the city and I believe it is the best spent in aiding this work.

"Security of property depends upon education or upon force, and I believe that free public libraries worked for the education of the people are better safeguards of the rights of person and property than policemen and bastilloes."

Made Pure and Sweet by the Use of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Trial Package Sent Free.

Do not go among your friends with a breath so odious as to make your presence distasteful. Foul breath is capable of easy removal if you will take a little time to overcome it. Generally foul breath comes from one of two causes, impure gases or foul digestive fluids.

Charcoal is the recognized absorbent of foul gases known. It completely attracts poisons and oxidizes their evil effects.

A noted French physician several years ago used charcoal to kill three men and with a teaspoonful of charcoal removed the bad effects of this terribly awful poison.

A full charcoal in a bed room or cellar will soon foul air pure. Pure yellow oil is mixed with honey and the compressed cake of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Foul breath is the result of bad digestion and bad blood. Simply dissolve one or more after meals and at bed time and foul breath flees at once. No matter how you cause those gases, whether by bad food, alcohol or abuse of the stomach, Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will stop gas making and sweeten your breath.

They are a positive blessing to the eating of onions, which cause you no inconvenience.

BOSTON GIRL OPERA STAR MAKES AMERICAN DEBUT

Madame Bernice James de Pasquali, formerly Bernice James of Boston, who made her debut in grand opera at the Metropolitan Opera House last night.

Madame Bernice James de Pasquali Wins Fame Without Foreign Training.

New York, Jan 2.—Madame Bernice James de Pasquali, formerly Miss Bernice James of Boston and now the wife of Count de Pasquali of Italy, made her American operatic debut at the Metropolitan Opera House tonight on the leading role of 'La Traviata."

She is the first American prima donna, or foreign one either, to sing on the operatic stage in this country without a foreign training. Her voice was cultivated in this city under direction of Oscar Sanger. She has sung abroad, but did not study there or "complete" her musical training there. Her voice was thoroughly trained in her native country.

Madame Pasquali has a rich, colorature soprano. She was heard to splendid effect at her debut tonight and received warm applause

She is essentially an American and is proud of it. She is descended from an old Revolutionary family and is a member of John Adams Chapter D. A. R. of Boston. Her great grandfather was Caleb Loyell of Boston, a noted figure of his time.

When the Marquis de Lafayette came to the United States from France and at various times at the Old North Church, Boston a famous "Refreshment Corner." Caleb Loyell was called to sing before the distinguished guest.

The prima donna recently came back to New York from Havana. She was induced to visit Cuba at the request of Gen. Gerardo Machado, who heard her sing. After the Cuban visits immediately had a contract to appear at the Metropolitan.

Her pride as an American is greatly gratified because she is the first American prima donna to sing in grand opera here without having been previously trained abroad

Bangor, Me., Jan 2. A large number of deer were killed in Maine during the open season, but this number is not equal to the number killed in other years. Simply because there are not so many deer to be killed. The number of moose killed was also less than in former years, while fewer bears were killed than in any year since 1897. The shipments of deer by rail were the largest on record.

The railroads carrying game from points north of Bangor, Me., to the city of Boston and other points south, report that the number of deer killed in 1907 was 1,500 more than in any year since 1897. The number killed in 1908 will probably be 2,000 more than in 1907.

BOSTON, SUNDAY, JANUARY 3, 1909.

RETIREMENT AT 70 ON MERE PITTANCE FOUGHT BY HUB TEACHERS.

Boston Masters' Association to Wage War Against Action of School Committee.

PENSION CALLED "INSULT"

Only $180 Yearly to Educators Who Have Given Lives to Service of City.

Thoroughly aroused to the evils of the pension system by the resolution put through the School Committee last night retiring the teachers' retirement at seventy years, the Boston Grammar Masters' Association will this week begin a fight against the resolution which retires thirteen High School principals who have been recognized as leaders in educational progress in the schools.

The fight is not directed so much against the retirement of teachers as against the retirement upon inadequate pension.

The resolution, without establishing an examination for incapacity, arbitrarily rules out of the schools all who are over seventy years old. Principals who have been receiving $3,180 a year and have reared families and established homes in the suburbs are reduced in income to $180 the total pension the city pays, equal to 49 cents per day—the pension offered by the city after years of service in the schools.

In many cases, it is asserted, the operation of the rule will result in the spectacle of former headmasters of Boston High Schools conducting boarding houses in order to eke out an existence in their declining years. Such is the penalty for the crime of being seventy years old while a teacher in the Boston schools.

Public Sympathy Stirred.

The purpose of the new rule is to get new blood into the schools and to reduce the payroll. It is admitted that the pension is totally inadequate, and that the salaries paid the aged principals have been too small.

The Boston Grammar Masters Association to confer with the School Committee in order to effect a compromise, in September next the thirteen aged principals will be automatically retired from the payroll after a career full of honor and earnest work in the education of Boston children.

Public interest is already stirring in the interest of the teachers. There is a rumor of a committee of citizens to petition the legislature for the purpose, the leader of which will be Thomas Kenney, who in Boston Monday after-noon three weeks ago.

Both indignant at the action of the committee in reducing them to poverty in the aged principals declare that the offer of the pension of $180 is an added insult.

If the new rule is to be enforced, the results of the work is to be far-reaching, declared a principal last night. In New York, it is pointed out, applying the honor tax receipts, pensions in force are not less than one half their salaries at the time of retirement.

Must Seek New Work.

"The resolution came as a bolt from a clear sky," said J. Wildard Brown, principal of Roxbury High School, marked for retirement. "It seems to have been put through without appreciation of conditions of its result. For myself I may say that I have never had any difficulty in leading my class on a sixteen-mile tramp over the Lexington and Concord battlefields.

I am the second principal at Emerson High since it was built. I entered the department in 1874. Before that I was in Boston Public Latin School, being here in the Emerson nineteen years.

"Reference has been made to the fact that naval and army officers are retired earlier than teachers are. That is very true but they are retired on three-fourths of their salary. We are not subject to retirement if the acceptance of the meager pension was not a humiliating confession of poverty. Anything approximating comfort for persons of our years are receiving would be appreciated. The lack of a pension practically means that we shall have to seek other lines of work, some of us. Just at what age I shall look for a living is of course problematical."

"All men agree that some definite retirement age is required in the administration of a large system, and that seventy years, the three score years and ten of the Psalmist, suffices with conservative," said David A. Ellis of the School Committee. "Such individuals as reach that age should be sufficiently well and bodily vigor to discharge more-stuffy duties as pertain to those of teacher or instructor in public schools. If there be such cases they are rare and no consideration a factor of slight importance in the consideration of a rule meant to apply to the numbers of people in the course of many years.

Committee Has Remedy Power.

"Such objection as has been made to the fixing of a retirement age is not really based, I believe, upon the opinion that the rule is unwise, but upon the belief that it is unwise, but upon the belief that it is unwise, but upon the belief that it

Listen to Mabel!

She Talks About Fawning Naturalists, the Tariff and Henry James.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

SCENE—A downtown street.
TIME—Lunch time.

POLLY—I see where Mr. Roosevelt says he ain't no hunter, but only a fawning naturalist. What's a fawning naturalist?

MABEL (positively)—A fawning naturalist is a nature faker that stuffs fawns.

POLLY—But how can you stuff fawns? Fawns is made out of marble. Don't you remember that story about the Marble Fawn in Mr Hawthorne's book?

Mabel (decidedly)—Mr Hawthorne don't write books. He's an actor and plays in a show.

POLLY—Yes, he did, too. Anyway he wrote that one. It was about a fawn that had the arms and legs of a man and the ears of a deer.

MABEL—I don't know anything about that. I s'pose his press agent wrote it for him. These actors will do anything to get their names into the papers.

POLLY—But a Mr Roosevelt going to stuff fawns when he goes hunting. I bet it was going to be along some Christmas to-do like that, for a fact.

MABEL (contemptuously)—You mean toxicologists. That's what they call people that stuffs wild animals.

POLLY (resentfully)—Well, whatever it is. Ain't he going to kill anything any more?

MABEL—Yes, but not for pleasure. He says now that anybody that kills for pleasure is worse than a Congressman.

POLLY—But is it any better to kill because you're a fawning naturalist than because you do it for pleasure?

MABEL (scornfully)—Certainly it is. You kill in the interests of science when you're a fawning naturalist. That shows you're educated.

POLLY (with conviction)—I don't suppose it makes much difference to the things we're stuff wether we kill them for science or not when kill them just as good don't you?

MABEL—Yes, I s'pose you do. But think how it educates people.

POLLY—I don't know. My brother's got a splendid education. He's a bookkeeper, but he couldn't keep books no better after he'd looked at a lot of stuffed wild animals than he could before, could he?

MABEL (in despair)—Polly, you don't understand such things so there ain't no use trying to explain them to you. I think Mr Roosevelt is just splendid. Look at all the new words he's invented, like "thrills" and "strenuous" and "delighted." A man has to have brains to be a inventor.

POLLY—I've seen Mr. Bentley invented a perpetual motion machine once. He'd have sold it for only the man said it would cost too much for power to keep it going.

MABEL (thoughtfully)—I was interested in machinery. It gets your clothes all dirty.

POLLY—That's true. I s'pose that's why the jails are always saying that political machines is such dirty things. What is a political machine, anyway?

MABEL (with conviction)—A political machine is a thing to put votes in, and they come out diff-erent from the way you put 'em in. That's the way the corrupt corporosities keep themselves in power.

POLLY (grieved)—It's certainly awful the way they do run the country. I told papa you'd be home to help him vote election day, and the reason he didn't was because I forgot it was election. What is the tariff?

MABEL—It's a thing to what the corpse that pays says it is. Anything that helps to get a few people in the money. A man that is in favor of the tariff is called Mr Carnegie. And he's rich because it helps him so much.

POLLY (sadly)—I wish he'd give some of his books into his library. I went to one of 'em once and there wasn't anything by Laura Jean Libbey in the whole library.

MABEL—I s'pose you'd like to read some of her books.

POLLY—The lady down in my flat is always reading books by a man called Henry James. She said it would give me a headache for certain.

MABEL—Why would it, I wonder?

POLLY—I don't know. I s'pose it's because I couldn't understand one sentence to remember because it sounded fine, but I haven't got a idea what it means.

MABEL—How did it go?

POLLY—It was something like this. A faint inarticulateness, aggie, ephemeral, almost. I only saw transient, overspread and benumbed her unkown [illegible] with [illegible]splendid unnatural beauty. [illegible] to let show behind [illegible] every throb of her intensest [illegible] thing, with tremulous emphasis in every chord of her subordinated [illegible] emotions."

MABEL—Gee! I never knew. What does it mean?

POLLY—Sometimes I think I know, and then I don't. It's queer and [illegible] and [illegible] upper lip spread so [illegible] I find I got lots of [illegible] like.

MABEL—Ain't it interesting? That thing about [illegible] and [illegible] I'll bet he never was [illegible] that [illegible].

POLLY—Ain't it grand. And don't it make you feel [illegible] with [illegible] a [illegible] almost unfathomable in its [illegible] of her subliminal [illegible].

MABEL—It certainly does. It seems a shame that a man that can write like that shouldn't take the trouble to put some sense into what he writes. One thing about Mr Hawthorne, you always know what he's writing about.

POLLY—Yes, and he [illegible] about [illegible].

MABEL—Oh, that! Well I guess he ain't so sure himself that he knows what he's writing about when he writes about that.

There were convulsions in Boston last night. They were epidemic. Hen Scho[illegible] Lane at the Castle Square Theatre. The pallor of death crept across some of the faces [illegible], while John Craig, Donald Meek and George Hassel were [illegible] their examination by Al Roberts after Craig had [illegible] from the circus ennui and the performers had been treated to a couple [illegible] of reading, unrestrained roars and shrieks of laughter [illegible] crowd. None are seldom heard. It was every bit justified too for many [illegible] Craig's performing peculiarities to rarely seen. This same spirit of sparkling [illegible] pervaded the whole company from start to finish of the merry [illegible]. A more piquant, graceful, effective captivating [illegible] than that of Mary Young would be hard to imagine. Her pantomime was exquisite, her [illegible] was a delight her singing was sweet and tuneful. In the Little Piece [illegible] for charming archness won every heart. Mr. Meek was the [illegible] cause of [illegible] every minute. His retreats over the Terrible Turk, whom he had [illegible] for the circus wrestling match, were breeders [illegible]. His whimsicality whether as the American bartender or as the [illegible] assortment of Laddie was such a long journey to see. Two such clowns as he and Mary Young in their [illegible] duet would make the fortunes of any [illegible] and half the audience [illegible] Mary's inspiriting little cry, while dozens kept repeating it [illegible] left the theatre.

ZIEGFELD'S LATEST MUSICAL REVUE

FOLLIES OF 1908

With NORA BAYES and All the Favorites

WHAT THE BOSTON CRITICS SAID:

GLOBE—Follies of 1908 is infinitely superior to the other musical revues of the year that have been shown here.

HERALD—The seventy jokes fight in an irresistibly funny that it defies description.

TRANSCRIPT—The object of the "Follies" is to amuse, and certainly it succeeds, and the program is one that piled every mock and mimicry of the Tremont found the pass much to its taste.

JOURNAL—A bill above all new and is presented by clever performers who know how to entertain.

TRAVELER—Ziegfeld's Revue is a joy to be sure, and improves big bit with each visit.

POST—It is all very clever, sure to please and entertain.

AMERICAN—Follies is staged gorgeously, costumes and a beautiful Ziegfeld's most amusing effect.

ROOSEVELT BEHIND TAFT'S DESCENT UPON THE ISTHMUS.

Trip Organized for the Defence of Canal, Writes Alfred Henry Lewis.

By Alfred Henry Lewis.

Washington, Jan. 2.—Mr. Taft's descent upon the Isthmus is due to a Roosevelt, not a Taft suggestion. The purpose of the expedition is not so much to make discoveries as to organize a corps of witnesses and arrange for canal defence.

The canal foe is everywhere. The House and Senate woods are full of him—sly, furtive, incessant. He will attack the canal in every detail of its construction. Mr. Roosevelt has sent Mr. Taft with a force of engineers to study the canal situation, so as to be ready to reply to those attacks.

Mankind will never know the worth and honest force of Mr. Roosevelt until after he is gone. It is only then that mankind has the perspective it now waits till the last car, and sometimes misses that and has to walk. In this case it doesn't overtake its object until a century after he is dead.

Mr. Roosevelt would have made a great soldier. He sees things coming, and never acts too late.

Now, when every railroad wolf in Congress, as well as the lobbies thereof, will be yelping and snapping about the flanks of the canal, he intends the Taft administration shall not be dealt with witnesses and facts to beat them off. Which is the reason why those six engineers, every one of them of repute and high standing, accompany Mr. Taft.

Now at the finish of Mr. Roosevelt's administration, I cannot refrain from considering how he has disappointed his enemies, refuted the false prophets. Do you recall the fears that were expressed concerning him? Some by good intent, by some by people not so good. He was young!—headlong!—full of a tempestuous lustiness. He was hungry for a fight! He would plunge us into war! And similar hysterical claptrap.

Steadiness Required.

It is natural that a people should require steadiness in a President. Poise and balance are everywhere desirable, and particularly in the White House. Any student of governments will tell you that the President is the most powerful officer elected by any scheme of state.

The Sultan, for example, is a bridleless creature in theory, the frontiers of whose powers are not to be found, or, if found, in practice, however, the Sultan dwindles to a splendid monarch with potentialities imaginary rather than real.

In what matters of taxation and war and peace bear upon a President he may be handless, voiceless, compared with an American President.

The latter was scattered up and down the face of nature by 90,000 office holders, all under less double the bit, these of Democratic persuasion, and thus standing ready when it comes to any conquest of self or nation.

With such a bodied sweep of power it can be seen at a glance how personal attributes of a President for courage and unscrupulous and integrity and intelligence cannot be overstated. During his term of years they become the brain and character, the courage, pro-pitiable integrity, intelligence of the nation.

Less many times in the near future will the public regret the White House absence of Mr. Roosevelt. Truly, Taft is a good man. But there he has been ready the one for a choir that Mr. Roosevelt has also the White House in his place to tired people. The best President will be the President who spends the most time on his feet.

Roosevelt's Power.

They were either too mendacious to admit or not wise enough in their simplicity to see that the very Roosevelt force was the thing most likely to keep the peace. reserve a big stick in the hand and aloof. It is a nation's weakness, not its strength. That gets it into trouble.

And, as has been seen, by the very freedom Roosevelt has exercised as President, this country is strong as the President is strong, weak as the President is weak. Given a President of the Roosevelt stamp, and no sane man need lose a moment's needful justice abroad or internal security. Given a President of the Taft mould, and no feather weighs less. Of the Mail Twelve Years' Peace and no sight more terrible than the War of 1812.

Aggression after means, no precision and no [illegible] strength. The [illegible] went the way [illegible] obeyed. This should have amendment When the [illegible] Roosevelt [illegible] nothing so dangerous as inaction, and doing the wrong thing is often better than doing nothing at all. Wherefore, we have the wisdom of the President.

In his destinies of a state there can no disorder or the disaster of stagnant. A nation is like a man on a bicycle who is not riding while he a moving but falls down when he stops.

Recurring to Mr. Roosevelt, were I asked to name the secret of his marvellous power I should say laying my finger on the very heart of his genius, and not forgetting at the same time his prudence, his courage, his [illegible] the nerve every estimates a [illegible]

Mrs. Winthrop M. Adams (nee Miss Freda A. Knowles) of Warwick, R. I.

"Win" Adams, Old Brown Fullback, Secretly Weds at Providence After Auto Dash.

How they eloped from Warwick, R. I., friend of the family whirled the young couple from Warwick to Providence, to Providence, with the bride's father pursuing them in his automobile, but arriving personally conducting the flight and actually at the court house only in time to see the ceremony in All Saints' Episcopal Church, [illegible] Miss Freda A. Knowles, daughter of Dr. James H. Knowles of Warwick R. I.

Mr. Adams, who made a name for himself as a great athlete in Brown University, and Miss Knowles, a talented art student, became acquainted when the former was at college in Providence. They had been engaged for some time, but none of their friends dreamed that they would be married so quickly.

Mother Was Away.

Mr. Adams was visiting Miss Knowles on December 4. The day before he had come from Warwick to Providence and the young people suddenly decided that they would not wait, but would outwit all of their friends. Because of the death of Mr. Adams's mother a license could be secured for some time, but none of the wedding had been planned for, for differences from the romantic ceremony that did take place.

Mrs. Knowles was calling at the time of the elopement, but Mr. Adams and Miss the notion into Mr. Knowles, with the young couple to be [illegible] touring car and Dr. Edward Haskell, a wife when she married.

Miss Knowles's husband and wife. After the wedding the young couple went to Mr. Adams's home in Cumberland, where they have taken up their residence, but it was not until yesterday that the story was told.

Fullback on the Varsity.

Winthrop Adams—"Win" he is commonly called by his friends was a member of the class of 1905 in the Rhode Island Training School, Cambridge. He played on the football, baseball, basketball and hockey teams. He was considered a phenomenal pitcher for his school nine.

At Brown University, Adams in his freshman year made the athletic teams with ease and in the Brown-Harvard football game in 1905 he held his own as a player with the mighty Crimson. He was president of his class in Brown as well as in college and in the university he took part of the regular musicals.

Following his graduation he will hold a special meeting this afternoon at No. 24 Tremont street, when [illegible] Hayward goes to receive [illegible] on the new eight hour work day, which [illegible] will go into effect [illegible]

Henry Sterling will receive [illegible] unions and what they have accomplished. H. Brooks Baptist Church to-day.

RICH ROVER OF 60 WALKS 20,000 MILES

H. B. Stewart Leaves Boston for West After Working Way Cross Sea.

In order that he might complete the 20,000-mile walk which he set out ten years ago to accomplish a modern young adventurer and soldier of fortune left Boston on a long tramp to Maryland.

The Walker was Henry B. Stewart, a sturdy, robust man of about sixty years, who arrived here on the Leyland liner Philadelphian, after having endured much misery in a steerage passage across the Atlantic.

Stewart made a very pitiable appearance as he landed, for he is the fellow who on the 48th and start d on his long tramp. He was dressed in typical English costume, a long coat, knee breeches, gaiters and heavy shoes. He carried a short walking stick.

Stewart was born in the Woolwich Barracks, London, his father being an army officer from France. His mother was a daughter of a wealthy English family. When Stewart was a child he was left to the care of servants, and this, he says, is the reason he has been in almost every land of importance in the civilized world.

His longest walking trip was from Boston to Portland, and he says that he has walked from Portland to Boston and return. Stewart says that he has never had any money with him since he has been in this country, and has subsisted entirely on what he could earn by doing odd jobs of work.

He declared that he will stop only when he has completed the 20,000 miles.

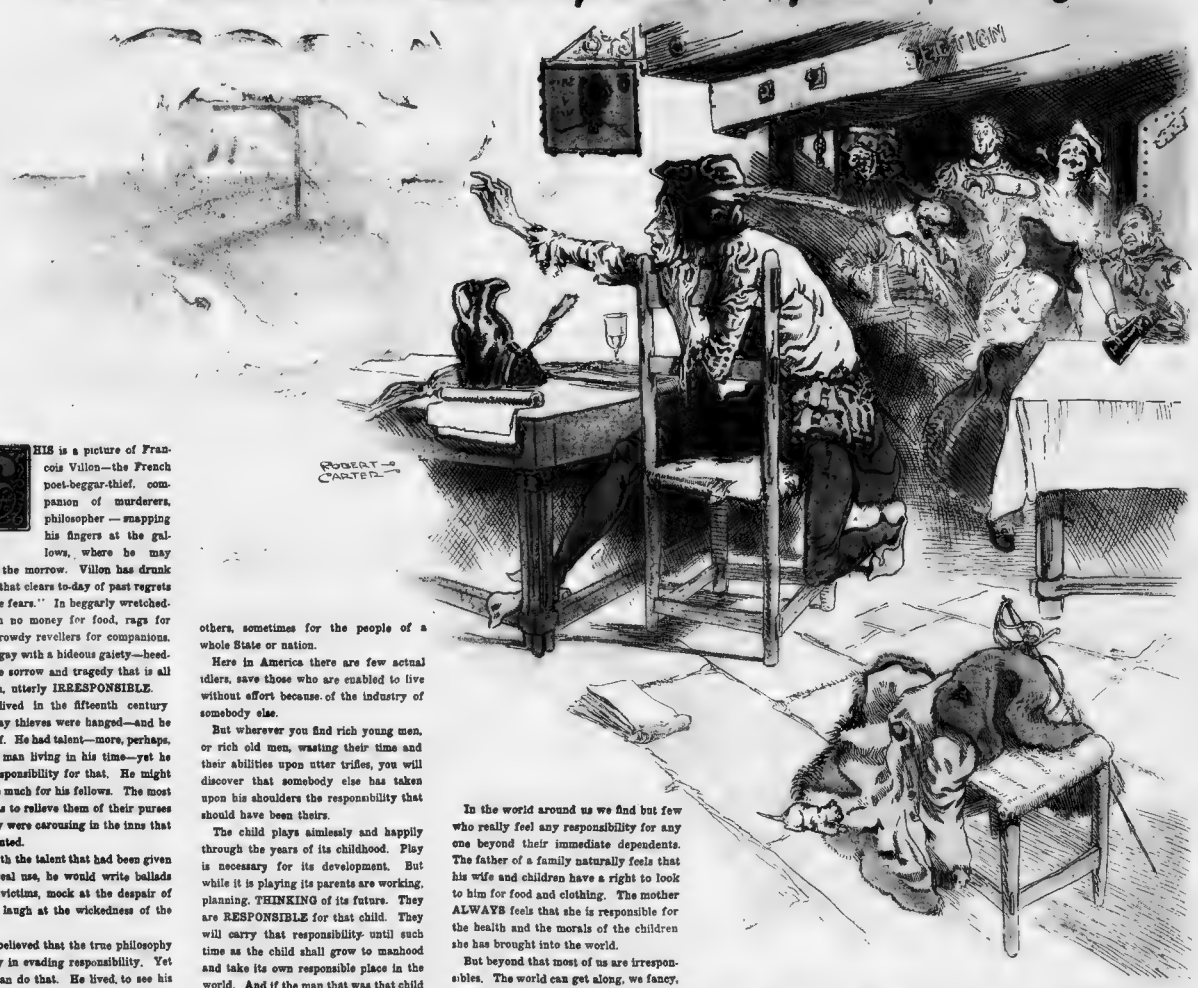
We Cannot Escape Responsibility



Once a Man of Genius Tried It, and His Life Ended in Wretchedness and Despair.

THIS is a picture of Francois Villon—the French poet-beggar-thief, companion of murderers, philosopher — snapping his fingers at the gallows, where he may swing on the morrow. Villon has drunk "the cup that clears to-day of past regrets and future fears." In beggarly wretchedness, with no money for food, rags for clothing, rowdy revellers for companions, he is still gay with a hideous gaiety—heedless of the sorrow and tragedy that is all about him, utterly IRRESPONSIBLE.

Villon lived in the fifteenth century In that day thieves were hanged—and he was a thief. He had talent—more, perhaps, than any man living in his time—yet he felt no responsibility for that. He might have done much for his fellows. The most he did was to relieve them of their purses when they were carousing in the inns that he frequented.

And, with the talent that had been given him for real use, he would write ballads upon his victims, mock at the despair of the poor, laugh at the wickedness of the world.

Villon believed that the true philosophy of life lay in evading responsibility. Yet no man can do that. He lived, to see his mind and body succumb to the fumes of liquor, to feel the icy hand of old age at his throat, to know that his genius had vanished away, and that only the empty shell remained, racked by disease and shaken by the biting cold.

The knowledge of what might have been came home to him too late. He had trifled with life. He had wasted his genius. The capacity for achievement was gone; only the memory of his empty gaieties was left; only the ability to suffer was unimpaired by his worse than worthless life.

For everything that is in this life somebody must be RESPONSIBLE. There is no escaping responsibility. If YOU evade it, you but pass it on to others, who must bear it for you. But, evade it though you may, for a time, you can never hope to escape it altogether. The Creator of the Universe has ordained that every creature who dwells therein must be responsible—for HIMSELF, at least, often for many others, sometimes for the people of a whole State or nation.

Here in America there are few actual idlers, save those who are enabled to live without effort because of the industry of somebody else.

But wherever you find rich young men, or rich old men, wasting their time and their abilities upon utter trifles, you will discover that somebody else has taken upon his shoulders the responsibility that should have been theirs.

The child plays aimlessly and happily through the years of its childhood. Play is necessary for its development. But while it is playing its parents are working, planning, THINKING of its future. They are RESPONSIBLE for that child. They will carry that responsibility until such time as the child shall grow to manhood and take its own responsible place in the world. And if the man that was that child is a real man, he will then assume the responsibility for his parents—carry the load that they carried, that they may spend their declining years without responsibility.

In every great organization, business or political, there are those who take the great responsibility. They are paid better than the others—as they should be. They it is who do the planning, the managing, really the THINKING for the others.

Their work is hard—it is not an easy matter to carry your own load and that of many others But it brings its reward in increased development and increased enjoyment of life. For it is far more pleasant to feel that you have a real place in the world—are actually doing something to help advance it—than to know that you are merely existing, recking nothing of what to-morrow may bring, trusting blindly to the future.

In the world around us we find but few who really feel any responsibility for any one beyond their immediate dependents. The father of a family naturally feels that his wife and children have a right to look to him for food and clothing. The mother ALWAYS feels that she is responsible for the health and the morals of the children she has brought into the world.

But beyond that most of us are irresponsibles. The world can get along, we fancy, without us to help. We will take care of ourselves; let everybody else do likewise.

A selfish philosophy. If it were universal, this would be but a place of warring, greedy beasts of prey, each trying to get something that was another's, each trying to maintain himself at the expense of every one with whom he came into contact.

But, fortunately, there are those whose responsibility is broader and of a higher quality. They are called upon to do the real thinking for the world—to plan its governments, to arrange its progress, to accumulate its knowledge.

When such leaders happen to be honest, all is well. But when they are themselves greedy, with two thoughts for their own interests to one for the public interest, there is corruption, with its train of sin and sorrow and want and suffering.

In this Government of the United States of America, if each citizen assumed his full share of responsibility, there would be no real problems to solve. Then it would be impossible for crafty men to get all the power into their own hands. A great body of THINKING, responsible voters would insist on a wise majority rule.

There are not many Villons — unfortunately for literature, perhaps, but fortunately for the world.

Yet in most men there is too little desire to do their share—too little inclination to help carry the load of those who cannot carry it for themselves.

You who go carelessly to and from your work and see a poor woman carrying on her head a load of fuel to keep her fatherless children warm are highly indignant that such things should be.

Yet how do you know that you are not in part to blame for them? Did you ever stop to inquire just how that woman came to be distressed? Did it ever occur to you that perhaps you, with but little inconvenience to yourself, could have found easier work for her, or interested somebody who could find her work in her case?

The poor children you see suffering in the doorways—what did you ever do for them? Give them a ten-cent piece? No. You leave such matters to those who should attend to them, you say. Perhaps NOBODY attends to them! Then you might see that somebody did.

We cannot cure all human ills nor abolish all human suffering in a day. But let us forget the aged fiction that the poor we must have always with us. We CAN CURE POVERTY.

It will take thought—work—responsibility. But as soon as we are all ready to do our share—all willing to help those about us with what ability we have—we will make a BEGINNING. Just at present we are not even doing that

The Camera and Religion, by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Dr. Hippolyte Baraduc, the Parisian Scientist's, Wonderful Photographs of Prayer, Sorrow, Anger, Curative Force and Other Intangible Manifestations.

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

On this page are reproduced some most wonderful photographs. They are photographs of prayer.

A group of devout persons offered up prayer from the top of Eiffel Tower, Paris, June 21, 1908, and said applications were photographed, and are shown as a cosmos of ascending radiance and vapor.

Dr. Hippolyte Baraduc, the noted scientist and author, [illegible]

Dr. Baraduc [illegible]

[illegible] light [illegible] of a person, especially concerned [illegible] toward mental [illegible]. In the first [illegible] a [illegible] person is a [illegible] No head is [illegible] and [illegible] the most [illegible] changes. [illegible] graph the head is out and there is a [illegible] face. The clouds have shifted and opened up. In a third photograph you can see the face plainly. The conditions are much more serene than in the two preceding negatives. Mental [illegible] is being established and sound thoughts are driving from the forbidden shores of shadowland. The patient is surrounded by a gray and neutral atmosphere, the sign of the approach of normal conditions." Sad and violent thoughts are pictured as a small whirlwind of mental force, while a heartfelt supplication for the restoration of a friend produces a harmonious emanation endowed with its own illumination.

Extraordinary Photograph of a Cataract of Light. Believed to Be Curative Force, Descending on the Worshippers at Lourdes.

Emanation from the Brain of an Angry Man, Photographed by Dr. Baraduc.

Speaking of this wonderful discovery, Walter Devon says:

"These photographs are very suggestive to the healer who uses mental force to allay pain and heal the sick. They are a convincing argument for the truth that every disturbance of mind produces discordant vibrations, which appear [illegible] upon the creations of the picture; and whether these are [illegible] thoughts [illegible] are [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] produce more [illegible].

"But to me the most interesting [illegible] by these pictures is that prayers [illegible] centre of [illegible] are [illegible] and [illegible] thousands from many [illegible] in the form of a radiation of [illegible] are to be seen by the aid of the sharp and [illegible] camera, in the same way that these powers and [illegible] baptism of Pentecostal flame may properly be seen—as a spiritual and not a material [illegible]."

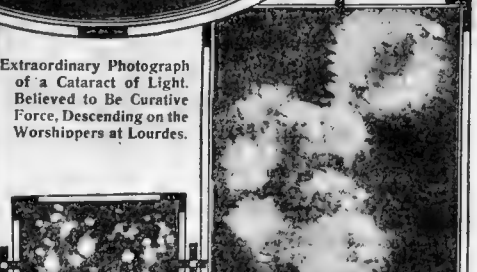
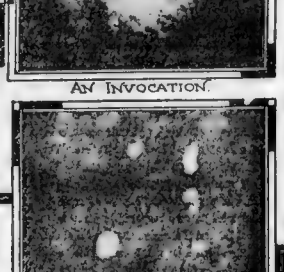
Violent Thoughts Photographed by Dr. Baraduc.

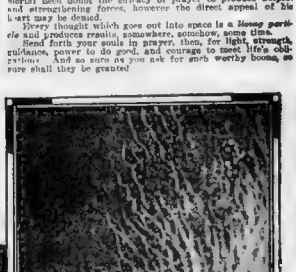


AN INVOCATION.

Another Photograph of the Cataract of Curative Force at Lourdes.



Photograph of the Thoughts of a Neurasthenic Person.



The Beautiful Form of a Benediction.

New Countess Anna Montague writes to an American periodical (the November Nautilus) still further accounts of the experiments made by Dr. Baraduc. She says:

"No less remarkable is another discovery due to the doctor's fertile brain, which is 'The Photography of the Invisible,' also an invaluable aid in the diagnosis of mental disease. The most in no wise be confounded with the so-called Spirit Photography, the methods employed being entirely different. The photographs taken by the doctor have been on exhibition in various towns in France and have elicited much curious comment, for the reason that the remarkable results obtained were due to processes unknown to conventional photographers.

"Dr. Baraduc began by photographing criminal effluvia and other remarkable depositions of subjects wrought up to a certain point, and whose forceful energy impressed itself upon the photographic plate in unerring outlines. These results encouraged him to attempt and the doctor extended his experiments.

"One of the impressions [illegible] was [illegible] from a person under the influence of anger which the doctor [illegible] photographed. Examinations of the plate [illegible] the forms of [illegible] which almost obscure the features, leaving but the suggestion of a human face [illegible] through a shower of [illegible] somewhat resembling the [illegible] from a [illegible] are [illegible].

Another form of photograph is even more startling, maybe, and is only possible when thought, highly concentrated, conjures up a distinct image of person or [illegible] which finds a material expression upon the photographic plate. Religion has no greater ally to-day than the camera.

The stars are yielding their marvelous secrets to this new intermediary between heaven and earth, and now, that the actual photographs of thoughts have been obtained, we may well place our hopes on the still more subtle achievement of photographing the soul as it leaves its earthly sheath.

Still later we may expect to see the photographs of our invisible helpers and friends, who are oftimes near us, but imperceptible to the human eye.

The photographs of Dr. Baraduc ought to stimulate the discouraged and doubting minds of men to lift their souls in prayer.

Dr. Baraduc, according to a statement of Mr. Devon, photographed the devout supplicants for health at Lourdes and obtained a picture of a substance like snow flakes descending from space, and every ray to be bright like a star.

If this is a veritable fact (as it seems it must be when given backed by such authority and such names), no troubled mortal need doubt the efficacy of prayer to produce helpful and strengthening forces, however the direct appeal of his heart may be denied.

Every thought which goes out into space is a living particle and produces results, somewhere, somehow, some time.

Send forth your souls in prayer, then, for light, strength, guidance, power to do good, and courage to meet life's obligations. And so sure as you ask for such worthy boons, so sure shall they be granted.

CLOAK ROOM TALES

BY ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

Behind the Scenes in Washington — In the Senate and the House.

By Alfred Henry Lewis.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The recent Water Ways Congress has this to its credit: it drew "Private John Allen—humorist, sage, statesman—of Tupelo to the capital. He put in a day of his time seeing old scenes, meeting old friends, in the House Chamber.

Cloak room talk ran rearward to the last Cleveland regime. Mr. Allen quoted the sour West, who said: "I regard Mr. Cleveland as one of the most original minds that ever [illegible] White House. For his latest Cabinet he did secure a statesman, [illegible] of whom I never heard."

In the above West sacrificed truth to epigram. Moreover, West didn't like Cleveland, and was rather the acrid cynic besides.

There were never eight stronger men in Washington than those who gathered about Cleveland's cabinet table during his second term. Also, no two of them, save in the one attribute of honesty, would have agreed in any least of detail. Gresham, border-born, raised in the forests, living in a day and region where the great thing was the MAN, was a natural partisan of the people. Olney was Gresham's precise opposite. Olney came from the conservative, property-owning, property-loving East. As a lawyer he was geared at the knee of corporations. Gresham and Olney were the result of two opposing schools, and as far apart as the poles. And yet each was sternly honest from his viewpoint.

Morton, of the agricultural, was a wide shot from either Gresham or Olney, while of is aggressive an integrity Morton liked war. He was a born petrel, and never happy outside all about him, he was for beating tariff to the tall levels of free trade. Resumed in at home by a solid wall of Republicans, he was a Democrat whom Jefferson would have applauded and Jackson would have taken to the hand. And yet, for all his spirit of berserk, he was one of the kindliest, tenderest of men.

Carlisle over in the Treasury was a timid soul. And in the sense of order-taking he had the military instinct. Politics was war; he called on a party as an army. The President was commander-in-chief. There was in a sword note no latitude of discretion. No right of argument was waived in him. An order from headquarters must not be criticised, subtracted from. It must be executed to the letter—executed with blind eyes.

This was excellent as a code for Carlisle, since he had no genius to originate, no courage to lay out a course. Mentally he was strong like a horse. But, like a horse, he was incapable of harnessing himself to a load. Some one must be there to hook the traces and later guide Carlisle. Thus directed and seconded, Carlisle would pull, uphill or down, a proposition of government that measured tons.

Your Cabinet man has officially two rooms, one is the reception room, the other is the special lair into which he may retire and bolt the door against the office-hungry multitude. When the second Cleveland administration took hold, I was driven to make a visit to Hoke Smith of the Interior Department. There were full five hundred of my fellow citizens standing in the reception room. They were so packed that the proverbial sardine in its aphoristical box was suffering oil outside the heart of a tornado. When he prepared his first annual report, the introductory paragraph carried an earnest suggestion that "the Department of Agriculture be abolished." Morton said that it was, in its argument of construction, illogical and unjust. No rights existed in favor of farmers that were not as cogently active for brickmayers, or tailors, or preachers. If the world were sure of the public propriety of an Agricultural Department, then he, Morton, was sure that departments of Masonry, of Tailoring, of Divinity, should be instituted.

"'How are you, Landis?' cried the breezy one. 'Where's the Judge?' meaning Gresham. 'In the other room,' growled Landis."

Morton was looking for a fight when he framed that report. However, the conservative Cleveland was not. And while he laughed over the preposterous ingenuity of Morton's reasoning, he pointed out to that vigorous Secretary that after all they had been called to lower to stadholder the various departments, not wipe them from the earth. At his request Morton struck out the opening and destructive chorus of his report before it was given to mankind.

Morton focused in contention for contention's stormy sake. Peace was the only failure, war was ever a success, in Morton's eyes. And because of this innate appetite for strife, Morton had backed into every controversy he could. If he could have come first, he must be the opposite of his environment. Therefore, being among free-soil folk, he was for slavery in the old day. Coming from a silver region (Nebraska), he was a great champion of gold. Finding protectionists

Smith was in the second room. Into his cautious presence, one at a time, the callers were conducted. Each remained from ten to twenty minutes. It would take a month to receive the folk ahead of me.

As I could get in a month, I went away. Since my business of the day pointed also to Gresham, I wended to the Department of State. My hope was low; it stood to reason that twelve as many people would be crowding Gresham's portals as I'd found about Smith's. To my amazement, I encountered no throng at all. All the doors of both rooms were swinging wide.

Gresham, tall, grizzled, straight as a pine tree, smiling like a day in June, was standing in the outer office. There was no sign of an interposing "messenger," no flunky of place was there to cross-question you and ferret forth your mission at this gate of Greatness.

As I walked into the unguarded room, Gresham turned: "What is it?" he asked.

When my business was accomplished, I called attention to his loneliness as compared with Smith's crowded house.

Gresham beamed. "There've been here," he said "Thousands! But they've got through and gone away. My system is better than Smith's. He locks himself up, and lets in one at a time. A man whom you've kept waiting half an hour feels as though he were entitled to see you half an hour. They catch him alone, and he can't get rid of them. Now, I stand in the middle of the room, and let in everybody. While a man is talking a dozen are glaring at him like impatient wolves. He hurries to a close; he cuts his business short; he gets through. The great feature of my method is that one caller throws another caller out!"

Gresham was personally as democratic as a Cheyenne. While he had a dignity all his own was ever known to slap Gresham on the back and call him "Walt." One would have been as likely to slap a mountain on the back and call it "Walt." He was forbearing, yielding with underlings, or with folk no match for him in power, but with men helpless. Between Harrison was President he fought but to the bitter last. When he got ready to test a Wabash receivership to tatters, all the railroad influences of the country were not strong enough to hold his hands.

Landis, he who fined Standard Oil $29,000,000, was Gresham's secretary. Landis was as unusual in his kind as Gresham himself, and lived on easy, old-shoe terms with his illustrious principal. There was a newspaper young man—one of your gushing, rushing, pushing personalities, that, fresh from college football fields, carry the flying wedge into journalism. Landis took no joy of this heading scribe who, with little tact and still less appreciation for the proprieties, would descend upon him at moments most inopportune, like—to employ a dairy simile—a pan of milk from a top shelf.

"Smith hung back until fairly forced upon his feet. There he stood, red, wordless. At last he managed to say: 'I don't know what to talk about.'" filling up a fire cent toothick with a five hundred dollar team." It sounds to me like our position on the Alaska seal question."

Just before Hoke Smith was inducted into the Department of the Interior, he had a little at a great dinner. Smith was six feet inches tall, wide as a barn door, modest to the point where blushes take the place of conversation.

Hatton, editor of the Washington Post was chairman for that dinner, and when the coconuts then and there passed about the cubs clamored for a speech from Smith. Hatton seconded the demand. Smith hung back until fairly forced upon his feet. There he stood, red, wordless. At last he managed to say:

"I don't know what to talk about."

Hatton, at one time a member of Arthur's Cabinet, thought he'd encourage the troubled Smith. "Tbmith," lisped Hatton, "tell uth what you'll do when you're Thecretary of the Inferior. I've been through the mill and can give you an idea if that will help you along. You'll find when you're thafely in your theat at $1,500 clerks will do the collecting and Cleveland will do the rest. Wherefore, Tbmith, there exisht no reason why you shouldn't tbpeak your mind freely here to night."

There lived some sparks of truth in what the excellent Hatton said. Cleveland would have his way; a notable occasion being when he compelled the silver Carlisle to turn his coat for gold in the beginning of his term. Vest, Cockrell, others of Carlisle's friends in the Senate, could not believe their eyes when "Carlisle-for-gold" stood forth in print. They had prophesied deeply the other way. Now when they knew their error, bitter were their sighs. It was silver's death wound—that Treasury pronunciamento of 1893! It was the beginning of the silver end, and wise Senate men of silver, such as Vest and Cockrell, knew it. Hence their deep-drawn lamentations. Also their idol, Carlisle, was shattered; Cleveland had broken him into pieces.

"Why doesn't Carlisle resign?" cried Vest, wrathfully, discussing the phenomenon; "why doesn't he resign?"

"Gresham, tall, grizzled, straight as a pine tree, smiling like a day in June, was standing in the outer office."

[illegible] had the ill-used Sir Peter Teazle: "Sir Oliver, we live in a damned wicked world, and the fewer we praise the better." That was the Wilbur Story thought; that, too, was Morton's.

Long ago, the great Storer set forth the enormity of proper newspaper custom, as he understood them, in an after-dinner speech. He might think. The hunt and [illegible] along until the bug again subdivided scientific somersaults in the more tangled central regions of Panama. My scientists were in despair. They were to succeed at last, however—a scientist always succeeds. Just as they were packing up to come home, they got word that the bug had been heard from in the District of Columbia. They saw he had surrendered. Finding escape impossible, that bug had come on to Washington (while own accord, ready apparently to take the oath of allegiance or anything else we might prescribe. On the heels of the news, my scientists trooped into camp, and captured the bug somewhere out toward the Soldiers' Home. The expenses of that bug hunt were over twenty thousand dollars. But we got the bug! And what more should a taxpayer ask?"

Morton was forever with his "scientists" as he called them. "My chief of bug wrestlers," he would say, "and the weather maker, is Professor [illegible] in our observatory in Baker City, Oregon. I've no reserved for either of my day [illegible] the fact in this report. Also, I'm the [illegible] on that one Mr. Smith in San Francisco instructions to shoot [illegible] Baker City at an expense not to exceed [illegible] dollars, to investigate the [illegible] of our Baker City men—and report.

"Yes," drawled Morton, an [illegible] contempt dominant in his [illegible] "you'll send your Mr Smith at San Francisco [illegible] at an expense not to exceed [illegible] dollars," when ordinary means have failed. What a fine Baker City fellow's name—

"John Drake. The [illegible] name [illegible]."

"'My scientists burst into the Rockies and took the trail of this bug. They pressed him hotly, and chased him to the Yukon River. Then he doubled on them—he was running into the Winter, and so were my scientists.'" time scribbling was pleasant and unscientific as [illegible] days.

"Come round [illegible] and then take a gentleman at his word in a way calculated to look smartness and [illegible]. Particularly was he prone to do this when he thought the attitude of the caller not generously loyal to him [illegible].

"There's no use talking," [illegible] Bissell, "I shall have to resign. My [illegible] business is going to pieces. All my old clients are drifting over to Lyndle Steinway." Cleveland, when Bissell recounted his [illegible] business and the luck of the industrious Mr Dean, said nothing. Within a week a newspaper friend of Harrison and per incident the correspondent of a Buffalo paper, came into the Postmaster-General's room.

"Sorry you are going to quit us, General," [illegible] "I've seen paper talk. Still I thought I'd call around, and give you a chance to say something I've heard about it, General Wilson. That, too, you may as well tell [illegible] I mean for publication. But, I suppose—"

While the scribe was giving off [illegible] statement, Bissell sat with round astonished eyes. At last he said:

"Come around to my house after dinner and say at 7.30 o'clock. I'll have something for you."

"You got your information straight," sighed Bissell, when the scribe and he were walking downtown after dinner. "I've been told of that casual talk of [illegible] days before I did not, however," continued Bissell, "expect to be taken up so short. But I've been to the White House since I saw you, and that is the way it stands. My resignation goes in tomorrow, and Wilson, of West Virginia, will be named in my place. You may imagine," concluded Bissell, "how you took my breath away this afternoon, when I tell you confidentially that your questions were my earliest on that I was no longer a [illegible]."

OH, WINNIE!

Verse by Carolyn Wells

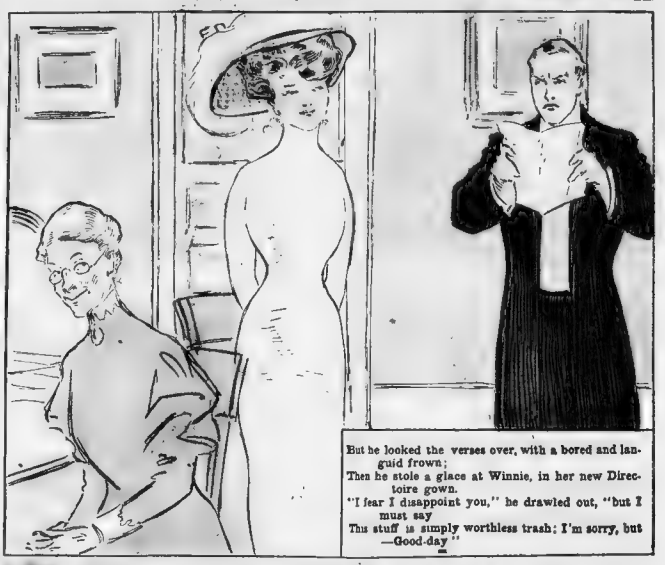
Winnie was certain she possessed a literary bent;
With a poem on "The Springtime" to an editor she went.
The theme was somewhat hackneyed, the metre limped a bit,
The rhythm was defective, and the scansion didn't fit

The sheets were scribbled on both sides, the writing wasn't plain;
Miss Hatchett read it slowly, with an air of cold disdain,
And then contemptuously said: "We can't use this, Miss Wynne."
And just as she was speaking the proprietor came in.

"Oh, Mr. Bumpus," Winnie said, "do read this poem, please!
I'm sure there must be merit in such soulful thoughts as these!"
"Excuse me," he replied, "in all such matters we refer
To our Miss Hatchett's judgment—we have confidence in her."



But he looked the verses over, with a bored and languid frown;
Then he stole a glace at Winnie, in her new Directoire gown.
"I fear I disappoint you," he drawled out, "but I must say
This stuff is simply worthless trash; I'm sorry, but —Good-day"

Then Winnie smiled right at him. Entranced, he watched her face.
Her eyes grew soft and twinkly. Dimples scampered into place.
Her red lips curved adorably. "I've changed my mind!" he said;
"This is the finest poem that I have ever read!"

When Winnie passed the office of the Home Gazette next day
She saw announcements of her work set forth with great display.
Complacently she thought, "I knew that I could write as well
As those silly little poems in the magazines they sell."

The first [illegible] of importance to the new year was [illegible] yesterday at Miss Kate Bacon, daughter of Mrs. William B. Bacon of Boston and Lenox, and Harold Van Buren Benjamin of New York.

The brilliant ceremony which was at first planned was given up on account of the sudden death of the groom's mother, the wedding yesterday being as simple as affair as possible.

Miss Bacon, who has long been a member of the Vincent Club and one of its most loyal supporters, had chosen eight of her friends from its ranks to serve as her attendants, and the gowns which had all been ordered when the news of Mrs. Benjamin's death necessitated a complete change of plans and the cancelling of the orders for the gowns.

The church, Lenox was the scene of the reception, only relatives, friends and neighbors being in attendance. The bride was given in white satin and rare family lace, and carried a bouquet of white roses and orchids. A small reception followed the ceremony at the bride's estate nearby.

Among the Boston guests present were Miss Dorothy Forbes [illegible] most intimate friend and one who will have served as bridesmaid; Ned and Miss Joseph Story Fay, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Forbes, Mrs. George H. This Week in the Theatres of Boston---News of the Plays and Players

Galaxy of Stars in New Shows Open Monday Night in Local Theatres.

JOHN DREW in "Jack Straw," Mabel Taliaferro in "Polly of the Circus," Clyde Fitch's new comedy, "Girls," Lew Dockstader's Minstrels and Vesta Victoria—all these are included in the new dramatic offerings for Boston on its initial "first night" of the new year.

John Drew comes to the Hollis, of course. He never appears in any other theatre in Boston. He brings his new comedy, "Jack Straw," by W. Somerset Maugham, the English playwright. His supporting company includes Rose Coghlan.

Another opening anticipated with eager interest is that of Miss Taliaferro

in "Polly of the Circus" at the Colonial. This is the play in which Miss Taliaferro shoots forth into stardom and which tells the story of a circus girl and a parson.

In "Girls," which opens at the Majestic, Clyde Fitch is said to have written and produced at his best. "Girls" deals with a trio of maids who hated man, so they did, and they wouldn't marry one, so they wouldn't. But what really happened is given by Mr. Fitch in amusing satire. Amy Ricard leads the company.

Minstrels at the Globe.

Lew Dockstader's Minstrels come to the Globe Theatre, beginning a three weeks' booking. Dockstader has injected several new ideas of his own on minstrelsy into this year's production.

The "Follies of 1908," the gorgeous Ziegfeld production, enters on its second week at the Tremont. The Neil Brinkley pictures and other multiple features of the "Follies" make it a strong rival, even against so many "first night" attractions.

Keith's Theatre leads a big vaudeville bill with Cressy and Dayne, the famous team in their equally famous sketch, "Town Hall Tonight." The Boston Theatre offers the continuous entertainment which is always enjoyed by the lovers of the new.

Vesta Victoria, the London music hall singer, is at the head of the Orpheum bill. She has a new song, "Now I Have to Call Him Father."

The Castle Square has had so much success with "The Circus Girl," that it is holding over the show for this week.

Hook's Stay Extended.

Frank Daniels continues at the Park Theatre, his engagement in "Hook of Holland" having been extended two weeks.

The Grand Opera House has a new drama, "Dr. Rocky Mountain Express," which goes on next week, a spectacular production and one with many scenes. The Bowdoin Square has a new bill of vaudeville and Boston Howard Athenaeum presents "The Rollicking Burlesquers" at the head of its bill.

The Empire Theatre has withdrawn this week, some time after the Imperial Theatre, Providence, has had the first production. Boston, therefore, will not see the new show for a week or two.

Clyde Fitch's "Girls" Opens at Majestic.

Marshalling girls in particular will be interested in the play at the Majestic this evening, which is the first production in this city of Clyde Fitch's new play, "Girls," which comes here from Daly's Theatre in New York with the original cast.

It has been called one of the best things Fitch ever wrote and produced. And he has put on a good bill.

"Girls" is a picture of bachelor-girl life in New York. A young woman, cynical and strong-minded, is bitter against men. She lives with two other girls who have their doubts about man anyhow. The three form a triangular league against the common object of scorn, man.

Just as the league is firmly on its feminine feet along comes matrimonial opportunity. The girls reject the opportunity with proper feelings for their part. But that is just where Mr. Fitch has written and produced in his happiest vein, telling what these man-haters in "Girls" do about the men when matters comes down to "cheese tacks," as he says it.

"Girls" is said to be admirable in the clever, pungent Fitch manner. It comes well recommended by New York.

The cast includes Amy Ricard, who made her original Boston bit as the "Girl from Butte," in "The Stubbornness of Geraldine"; Charles Cherry, Florence Reed, Ruth Maycliffe, Gertrude Foster, Herbert Standing and John S. Marvin.

Miss Ricard is the leading woman of the capable company selected by Mr. Fitch, and which has been assembled through the New York run and which comes to Boston in its entirety.

"Girls" is a comedy, and is written frankly to amuse people. It is satirical and farcical, even sensational at times. But it is Clyde Fitch humorous.

The Boston engagement at the Majestic Theatre is for two weeks only.

Mabel Taliaferro in "Polly of the Circus"

Mabel Taliaferro comes to the Colonial Theatre to-morrow night in "Polly of the Circus." She is one of the youngest stars [illegible] Augustus Thomas has written [illegible] and it is [illegible] a new [illegible] that she is [illegible] Thompson, producer of the show and is [illegible] for the Lyric and New York [illegible] enterprises.

Mabel Taliaferro has been on the stage since she was two and one-half years old, so her youth cannot be counted against her in the score of inexperience. Eighteen months ago, when "Polly of the Circus" had its first presentation at the Empire Theatre, New York, the youthful star was commended on every hand for the way her stardom was to be permanent. Next Monday she will be seen in the play which has been such a vehicle of success.

The star herself is not new to Boston theatre goers. She was leading woman in the Wm. Wigge of the "Shadow Patch," which [illegible] Boston a long time ago, and was the diminutive heroine in the vaudeville sketch, "The Littlest Girl," adapted for Bob Hilliard from Richard Harding Davis's stage story. Now she has grown from a character role to a leading one in "Polly of the Circus" in the week of Margaret Anglin. It is a sentimental story of a circus girl who is injured while the show is [illegible] and [illegible] Polly [illegible] home into the nearest house, much to the [illegible] of the [illegible] Western village, with [illegible] opinions [illegible] on [illegible] Polly [illegible] under the parson's roof [illegible] and [illegible] in love with the circus girl, who becomes a veritable ray of sunshine in the household. LIFE-LONG SOLITUDE AMONG THE HORRORS OF DEVIL'S ISLAND FOR ULLMO, THE FRENCH NAVAL OFFICER, WHO SOLD HIS COUNTRY'S SECRETS FOR THE SMILES OF A PRETTY SIREN.

LISON WELSCH, THE SIREN WHO LURED LIEUT ULLMO TO BETRAY HIS COUNTRY

MARCHING ULLMO AWAY TO EXILE ON DEVIL'S ISLAND

DEGRADING LIEUT ULLMO FOR TREASON AND DEPRIVING HIM OF HIS INSIGNIA OF RANK.

JUST for a few months of self-indulgence Lieutenant Benjamin Ullmo, of the French navy, must spend the rest of his life in a living death, suffering what is now universally admitted to be the most cruel punishment inflicted by any civilized country.

Ullmo has been sent to Devil's Island for life for attempting to betray the secrets of the navy, of which he was an officer, to a foreign country. He has been condemned to the same punishment as Dreyfus, but his case is very different from the latter's, for there is no question of his guilt, and there was a clear motive for his misconduct.

Ullmo proposed to sell the secrets of his government to satisfy the exigencies of a siren named Lison Welsch. She is described as a very fascinating person, of mixed French and Irish descent. Ullmo spent all his money on her and established her in a pretty villa called "Clic Clic" near Toulon, the principal French naval arsenal, where he was stationed.

The pay of a sub-lieutenant is trifling, but Ullmo came from a rich family, and he extracted all the money he could from them to squander on "La Belle Lison." When he had exhausted this resource he borrowed as much money as he could and ran into debt as heavily as possible. Nothing satisfied her. The more money he brought her the more she asked for.

Finally there came a point where the only way poor Ullmo could think of to raise more money for the siren was by selling government secrets, which had come into his possession as a naval officer. He began by writing a letter, under an assumed name, from Paris to the French Minister of Marine. He demanded $30,000 for a collection of French naval plans and secrets, and said that if he did not get the money

My Secrets Of Beauty

By Madame Lina Cavalieri

No. 1 Of a Remarkable Series of Articles By the "World's Most Famous Beauty."

MME. LINA CAVALIERI, the famous beauty and the well-known grand opera soprano, has made a life-long study of beauty culture and has, indeed, herself worked out many recipes whose secrets are her own. At the suggestion of many of her friends she is opening an atelier on Fifth avenue, New York, and in Paris, to put on sale some of these aids to beauty.

On this page to-day is printed the first of a series of extremely interesting articles on the Secrets of Beauty by one to whom Beauty means so much. The Article printed here may be considered as an introductory to the other articles which are to follow from week to week and will be full of detailed instruction, with prescriptions and recipes never before published, covering the widest range.

Every woman ought to read, study and know these Beauty Secrets of a Beauty who has been called "THE MOST BEAUTIFUL WOMAN IN THE WORLD."

American Women I Have a Different Beauty

The Most to One Permanent Cure

My Ten Commands of Beauty

1—When your mirror tells you you are not looking well, rest.

2—To keep the hair beautiful wash it once a week.

3—To keep the mouth young, massage with the little fingers the lines of petulance from nostril to lips.

4—To have always a youthful contour, keep the line of the jaw as thin as a knife edge.

5—To keep the nose shapely, give it frequent massage.

6—To take away the ugly, middle-aged redness of the nose, use hot compresses on it.

7—To keep the tired lines away from the eyes, bathe the lids and skin about the eyes with water as warm as you can endure it.

8—To make the eyes always brilliant, bathe them as often as you do your face. Use an eyecup filled with rosewater.

9—To avoid the multiplied ohms, sleep with the head low, the lower the better.

10—To refresh the dry, withered skin bathe it often in water as warm as you can endure.

You see, they begin with "rest." In practice they end with that. I might drop half of them and use rest instead. Rest is beauty's magic.

The beautiful woman has points. Let us enumerate them: A figure graceful in outline, not too thin, nor too fat. A face that is

Massage Like Patter of Raindrops

To be beautiful a woman must have a mouth well shaped, red, but not too red nor too moist and it must particularly over even and dainty teeth. The

Now, the secrets of the hair never better. It is not normal. It is unnatural. It is not pretty. It is not becoming. It is not graceful. It is not anything but a nuisance. It is not anything but a nuisance.

Two large handfuls of camomile

Hair Secrets

To keep them so I wash them a la

First in soapy water, through many waters until they are spotless as linen. Then I dry them, but only partly, by the heat of the hands themselves, not with a towel. Then I bathe them in this mixture

One ounce glycerine
Three ounces rosewater
Ten drops lemon juice

This should be well shaken before being used, and also every time it is used.

Sometimes when I wish to cleanse and whiten my face I use this mixture

One wine glass rosewater
Fifteen drops peroxide

But I leave it on the face not more than fifteen minutes. Then I remove it by a face bath of rose water or of cold cream to remove the dust.

If I use a cold cream I have not myself prepared, I always send it to a chemist to have it analyzed. Hundreds of times the report has come back: "This preparation contains lead." The person who prepares cold cream that contains lead in any form should go to prison. For lead makes pimples that may become cancers. It causes paralysis. In time it makes the teeth fall out. It is murderous.

A cold cream should contain pure almond oil. Some women use the almond oil without any combination and think they are at last hygienic. Unhappy women! They buy almond oil at 20 cents a pound and think it is pure. Pure almond oil costs 80 cents a pound.

For food a woman must be her own lawgiver. She can watch the effect of different foods and know what is best for her. One thing that is good for all complexions is much fruit, fruit of all kinds, especially in the morning.

Sleep, but not too much sleep, is one of the first aids to beauty. One requires a little more, another less. For me, if I have less than eight hours, I am tired. If more, I am tired also—heavy, stupid. In time, I should become anemic. The reason for this your physician will tell you. While lying down the lungs do not work freely. The air does not circulate through the body as well as in action. With too much rest comes to all anemia.

For sunburn or windb... I use this preventive

Anoint the face with cold cream.
Dust it with rice powder.
Then go forth in your motor car, your walk unafraid for you are proof from the sun and wind.

But if you have got sunburn or windb... then use

One part glycerine
Three parts rose water

Apply to the skin a few times a day, carrying it with a pure cold cream or with rose water alone.

This is another Cavalierism. In this I am almost particular. Always brush the hair straight back from the forehead. It makes the hair grow low on the temples and forehead.

So, for the scraggy neck and the hollow chest and the thin arms, take the tonic massage, that quick, light, yet stinging, tapping of the muscles by the cushion points of the fingers.

If I were asked what is the best friend of woman's beauty I should say, not fresh air, nor exercise, but a wineglass-full of the best rose water, with a half dozen drops of glycerine sprinkled and shaken in it. This refreshes the skin, and with a fresh skin no woman can be ugly, no woman need be even plain.

NEWEST FASHION IN WEDDINGS

Announce a Date—Then Get Married Privately Two or Three Weeks Sooner, and Save the Wedding Expenses.

EXCLUSIVE society circles in Denver, Colo., have received several unexpected jolts of late, so well directed as to produce admirable gasps for breath and groplngs about for objects of support.

The Western girl did it.

Nothing scandalous! My, no!

It's simply a case of certain leaders of the social circle among the younger members, showing their independence of and utter disregard for certain customs and established precedents with respect to wedding ceremonies.

Within the last three or four months society has been disappointed half a dozen times. The disappointments came about through sudden and unexpected changes in the dates of the wedding of certain society belles, who had led their friends to believe that elaborate ceremonies, followed by more elaborate and brilliant receptions, would mark their entry into the married state.

Without any apparent concerted action, although with singular unanimity, the daughters of half a dozen of Denver's multi-millionaires have slipped away from their friends and were married as quietly that in at least one instance the parents of the principals were in total ignorance of the fact until informed after the ceremony.

Evelyn Walsh, the beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Walsh, of Washington and Colorado, the multi-millionaire, left her father's country home at Wallurst in company with Mr. Edward McLean, the son of J. R. McLean, the wealthy newspaper publisher of Washington and Cincinnati, ostensibly for a spin across country in one of the Walsh touring cars.

In an hour Dr. Foster, of St. Mark's Episcopal church, had made Ellen man and wife. Papa Walsh was in the East at the time and Mamma Walsh only nine miles away, with telephonic communication established, though neither knew of the sudden culmination of the engagement which had lost a short time previously been announced.

It was a genuine shock to the society folk, who had been led to expect a brilliant wedding, with pomp and ceremony, the cost of which was forecasted into the hundreds of thousands.

"I didn't want gone to spend all that money for so silly a purpose," explained the pride later, and "papa" announced by telegram from Kansas City, that he was "tickled to death."

Miss Walsh's opposition to her father spending money unnecessarily recalls her remark as it was given to her fiance months previously.

"Princes and things may be all very well in their way, but not for me. If I could find a plain, simple, good American who wants me for myself, I will remain a bachelor girl. In fact, I rather incline to be a bachelor girl."

It was at the same tea that young Mr. McLean made his way to Miss Walsh's side and said something patronizing, which brought from her a reproof.

"Do you know, Eddie McLean, that you are a very irritating little boy?"

"Why?"

"Why? Well, for several reasons. You are so irritatingly self satisfied, when really you have no reason to be."

"No reason to be? Why not?"

"Because you haven't demonstrated your right to live at all. If I were a boy, I would show that I could earn my own living."

"How?"

"Well, why don't you go to work in your father's office? If I were you I would begin at the bottom and learn the newspaper business. Why, I would learn it myself if papa would let me. I think it is the most fascinating work in the world. I have a friend on a Denver paper who is going to take me to the next murder trial she writes up."

It was a curious coincidence that Edward Beale McLean afterward took the witness stand at a famous murder trial in Washington.

"I am a newspaper reporter," he testified. "Yes, I might be called a cub reporter, I suppose. I have only been at it a year. I was sent by the city editor to interview this woman at the police station. It was my opinion that she talked irrationally."

Then came the announcement of the engagement of Miss Gladys Cheesman to Mr. John Evans. Miss Cheesman is the heiress to the $15,000,000 estate left by the late Walter S. Cheesman, president of the Denver Union Water Company and owner of more city real estate than any other Denver citizen.

Mr. Evans is the son of William G. Evans, president of the Denver City Tramway Company, right-hand man of David H. Moffat, the banker and railroad builder, and is a grandson of the late John Evans, one of Colorado's earliest governors.

Society again expected an opportunity for brilliant display. The Cheesmans had but recently completed a beautiful mansion in the aristocratic section of Capitol Hill, and there seemed to be no good reason for avoiding a truly great society event.

Not so, however. Instead of awaiting the arrival of the previously announced date, the social world awoke one morning last month to learn that to the presence of a few immediate relatives the couple were married the evening before, and were even then speeding toward California in the private car of Mrs. George M. Pullman, an aunt of the bride, who had been quietly "clipped" of the changed date and hurried to Denver from Chicago for the occasion.

"I didn't want any furbelows and vulgar show," said Miss Cheesman to a friend, and another letter was received by those who enjoy display and ostentation on such occasions.

Only a few weeks ago Miss "Betty" Shearn, the daughter of the millionaire Texan, John Shearn, slipped away quietly to New York and there married T. A. D. "Tad" Jones, the famous Yale football coach, and then telegraphed her Denver friends about it.

That was the hardest blow of all, for it had been announced earlier in the season that Tad Jones would come West and claim his bride under somewhat more brilliant circumstances.

On December 9 Miss Lauraine Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Porter, a wealthy family, was married to Harold Strother Walker, youngest son of John Bridges Walker, the former magazine publisher and a large real estate owner. Nobody was present except immediate relatives, and the date was slipped back from some time next January to last week.

Neil Singleton, the beautiful niece of John W. Springer, president of the Denver Trust Company, took a little trip to Chicago recently, ostensibly to visit friends. James Quigg Newton had occasion to visit the Lake City about the same time. Result: Instead of two, they came back as one.

Miss Barbara Fisher, daughter of the late founder of the wealthy dry goods firm of Daniels & Fisher, at a Southern house party, fell in love with James Randolph Walker, and capped the climax by marrying him in a hurry. Another big surprise, for the Fishers live in a beautiful Capitol Hill castle, through the doors of which society matrons are always eager to pass.

Thus, instances might be still further enumerated indicating a unanimity of purpose on the part of the younger social leaders to break away from hitherto deep-seated customs and revolutionize wedding ceremony procedure. The movement has acquired the impetus of a fad.

"Why should we not get married privately?" said one of the pretty young multimillionaire brides. "It's so much more fun that way, and then it was so much more considerate of poor papa when the times were so hard.

"It saved so much expense in the way of flowers for decorating the church, and an utterly useless wedding gown that could never be worn again, and a thousand and one other expenses that go to make a society wedding a mere show for the guests, but only embarrass the young couple.

"So, why shouldn't we set a new fashion?"

England's College of Fuss and Feathers

HOWEVER busy and busy the traffic in Queen Victoria street, London, it never disturbs the restful atmosphere that always surrounds that dignified old red brick mansion which is the home of the College of Arms. As one enters the old panelled hall, it is as if we had stepped back into the Middle Ages. Heraldry was then held the most honorable of sciences and heralds ranked in real truth next in importance to emperors and kings.

Pageantry was then no mere artificial product, but an instinctive expression on the part of royalty. No royal or public ceremonial could take place without the presence of heralds and pursuivants; they were the ambassadors between sovereign and sovereign; they, it was, who declared war and announced peace. Now their functions have sadly declined in splendor. They still figure at coronations; they proclaim the accession of new sovereigns; but in the intervals they are largely occupied with nothing more important than the tracing of pedigrees, the preparation of coats of arms, and the decision of difficult questions of precedence.

It was in the chivalric days of Edward III. that heraldry in England seems to have been first organized and regulated as a State institution. But though Edward III. founded the Order of the Garter, the institution of the office of Garter King-at-Arms was due to a later but equally chivalrous sovereign, King Henry V. Garter King-at-Arms is the highest authority in the College of Arms under the sovereign and the Earl Marshal of England, and he enjoys many privileges. The other two kings are called provincial kings, the Clarendeux King controlling all of England from the River Trent southwards, while Norroy King-at-Arms controls all from the Trent northwards.

The heralds number six—Lancaster, Somerset, Richmond, Windsor, York and Chester, besides Surrey Extraordinary and Maltravers Extraordinary; while there are four pursuivants—Rouge Croix, Bluemantle, Portcullis and Rouge Dragon.

One of the most important duties of the heralds in earlier days was the holding of courts of honor. These were presided over by the Earl Marshal.

Disputes about the right to carry armorial bearings were settled there; but the courts also took upon themselves to punish duels or other words that reflected on the character of the nobility. Thus the famous Sir Richard Grenville—always a man of blunt speech—was heavily fined for calling the Duke of Suffolk a base lord.

Courts of honor could also degrade knights for serious misdemeanors; but when the character of some of those who have held the honorable office of heralds is remembered, such a proceeding must have appeared rather grotesque. For instance, Cook—Clarenceux King-at-Arms under Queen Elizabeth—stole a number of books out of the college library, while Ralph Brooke, of the York herald, committed similar thefts so rashly that he eventually came to Newgate, where he was hanged by the hand.

In the days of the Hanoverian kings it is said that the Tory nobles took advantage of the Heralds' College to provide for their discarded butlers and valets.

The granting of armorial bearings has always been regulated by the Heralds' College, and in earlier days the parvenu who sported a coat of arms without permission was likely to suffer for it; his carriage might even be stopped by the Earl Marshal's men and the arms forcibly defaced.

Coats of Arms for Sale.

It would be interesting to ascertain whether there are any records in the Heralds' College which would show at what date the chivalric sovereigns of their native Ministers, thought of turning the "fountain of honor" into a fountain of pecuniary profit. One of the charges against Cook, the Clarenceux King-at-Arms, already referred to, who stole the books out of the college library, was that he also granted arms to any one who applied and was willing to pay a large fee. Still, it must be admitted that in this reprehensible practice he was only following the example of his betters. King Henry VIII., it appears, being desirous of creating a new order of gentry to lessen the power of the older nobility, was in the habit of selling "arms." The fees sound modest; they varied from 53 to 3d 13s. 6d., but of course the immensely greater value of money at the period must be taken into account.

The original Heralds' College, which was founded by Richard II., stood in Pountney lane. Driven from this by Henry VII., who wished to give the house to somebody else, the Heralds retired to Bonerail Priory at Charing Cross. Queen Mary, however, in 1555, gave them Derby House, which had formerly belonged to the first Earl of Derby, on the site of the present college, that they "might at their liking dwell together and at meet times congregate, speak, confer and agree among themselves for the good government of the faculty."

Treasures of Real Interest.

Derby House was entirely swept away in the great fire, but fortunately all the records and books were preserved. The present building was completed in 1683, but the two escutcheons, showing the arms of the late of Man and the earldom of Arran, exploits of the house of Stanley, remain as a memento of Derby House. The apartments of Garter King-at-Arms were built by Sir William Dugdale, one of the most distinguished of the Garter Kings, at his own expense.

The library at the Heralds' College is full of books and manuscripts and other treasures of the greatest interest. Among them are the sword and dagger of that unfortunate gentleman, James IV. of Scotland, who fell fighting at Flodden; and the gaily turquoise-inlaid suit also by the same, in France when she charges him:

"He strike three strokes with Scottish brand,
And march three miles on Scottish land,
And slay the banners of his hand
In English lowness slaine."

It is of some interest to note that several of the most famous members of the college have belonged by birth to the class not entitled to bear arms. Camden, for instance, the author of the "Britannia," was the son of a painter in the Old Bailey. The famous antiquary, Elias Ashmole, Windsor Herald, was the son of a saddler of Lichfield.

The college has more reason to be proud to have counted among its members Sir John Vanbrugh, the dramatist, though it is true he framed the "honorable scheme" with scant respect. Eventually he sold his office of Clarenceux King-at-Arms for $2,000, alleging in excuse his own ignorance of heraldry and his constant neglect of his official duties.

Here At Last Are the Real "Seven-League Boots."

LEARNED persons are declaring that modern science in the department of mechanical inventions is proving that the old authors of fairy tales, as well as the seers who wrote portions of the Bible, were not only talented story tellers, but prophets. They foresaw what the age of steam and electricity was to bring forth.

Thus the railway locomotive, the automobile and the more recent flying machine give reality to visions of the prophets of the Scriptures. And lately a remarkable, though simple invention, is claimed to have duplicated the feat of the fabled "Seven-League Boots."

It was a very pretty fancy, those fairy boats which had only to be drawn on to carry the wearer seven leagues at a single stride. Of course, the teller of fairy tales may be allowed to exaggerate—the modern, real seven-league boots gives their wearer no such tremendous advantage, though they are claimed to double his stride and speed.

A good idea of this invention can be gained by a glance at the accompanying illustration. This type of foot gear is called "curve-shoe." It resembles a small bicycle wheel, slightly elliptical in shape, with a fastening at the top and a sort of semi-circular sleigh-runner attachment at the bottom side. There is also a rigid rod to support the leg to the knee, which has a joint at the ankle.

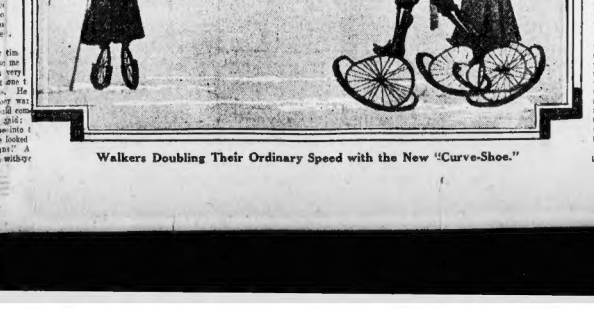
The contrivance is the result of much experimenting and of many modifications and designs. The non "walk" is said to take less time to learn than skating, and the weight of the shoes is not more than that of skates.

Fitted with a broad sole, the curve-shoe provides, it is claimed, the best means for traveling over a sandy soil. It is fastened to the foot and calf by three buckled buckles.

The wearer of the shoe uses the ordinary movements of walking. In place of the heel touching the ground, the curve is set down, and the step is completed by a forward rolling motion of the sole.

When the sole rolls forward a spring is tightened, and this swings the shoe forward when it is raised in readiness for another step.

Models for children have been made at the cost of two or three dollars, and are said to be in considerable demand in London, where the inventor has made public demonstrations of the value of his device.



Walkers Doubling Their Ordinary Speed with the New "Curve-Shoe."

The Strangest of All Causes for a Woman's Headache

ONE of the strangest causes for persistent headache in a woman ever heard of—namely a worm nearly two inches long which had made its habitation in an upper nasal cavity close to the poor woman's brain—is reported in a recent issue of the London Lancet.

A farmer's wife, twenty-eight years of age, residing in the neighborhood of Metz, had for a long time been afflicted with an unpleasant tickling sensation in the nose, to which symptoms violent headache succeeded, so that she was at length obliged to apply for medical aid.

The disturbance was irregularly intermittent, and generally began at the root of the nose and the middle of the forehead, or at the right frontal region, extending thence first to the right side, and then over the whole head. The attack was accompanied by a great discharge of tears, and sometimes even nausea and vomiting; the features were forcibly distorted, the jaws firmly closed, and the eyes and ears so very sensitive, that she could not bear the least light or any noise.

At other times she became delirious, pressed the head between her hands and ran about in a state of distraction. The pain was, according to her statement, like the stroke of a hammer, or as if some thing was perforating the skull, and the sufferer's features would then change, and she continued uninterruptedly for several days. During the whole period there were discharges from the nose mixed with blood.

Some medicines were employed, but no regular plan of treatment was followed, and it was not before a twelve-month's suffering that this singular affection terminated, after the expulsion of a worm from the nose, which moved with rapidity, and when pinned in water remained alive for several days; it was afterward killed by being put in alcohol, and sent to M. Marechal, who reported the case to the Medical Society.

He found the worm to be more than two inches in length, and one line in breadth; it had two antennae, was of yellowish color, flat, and consisted of sixty-four rings, on each of which were two legs. M. Marechal subsequently transmitted the insect to MM. Hollande and Rousset, who ascertained that it was a cockroach's larva.

The report does not state how this dreadful worm probably discovered that the poor woman's head was a pleasant place to live in, nor how other women may avoid a similar affliction.

All newspaper readers are familiar with stories of persons who firmly believe that some internal disorder from which they suffer is caused by some living thing swallowed in quiescent state, spending a dream—usually a lizard—which reptile continues to live and despoil himself in his new and unnatural habitat.

Such a case was reported in France not long ago. The victim was a peasant woman. In spite of her doctor's assurance that no lizard could live in her stomach, and that nothing really was the matter with her, her health steadily declined. Presently she declared that a brood of little lizards had come to bless their parent in her living prison—and the woman had to go to a hospital.

There she doubtless would have died, but for the self of a distinguished professor of medicine from Paris. He pretended to extract from the stomach a whole family of lizards—which he had brought with him to the hospital—and the patient promptly recovered!

THE MAN WHO STOLE THE EARTH

Most Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure Since Jules Verne's Masterpiece.

By W. Holt White.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

While the King of Balkania—known as Mr. Montgomery Jones—is occupying a villa on the Thames, near London, John Strong, a rich and adventurous young retired man, falls in love with his daughter, Princess Diana. At Strong's bungalow unless the first his friend, Jon Langley, is confronted by a scientific thing unknown and a wonderful wireless telegraphic mass available to any one who possesses the secret, portable mechanism which has forces and increase the electrical attraction of strong bodies. Strong, Langley and Lady Langley are attacked by a telegraphic device, or might lose his world at his motive. Worn accident discovers to him the great illegality of Montgomery Jones, through an entertaining party, which the king would like to be very dark. Strong, the scientist, is also in love with Langley's wife, but is being courted all by his friendship for Langley. Strong and Langley get astonishing proofs of the plot, after the Princess, who is really in love with the young attaché, Prince Ivan, has been called out of tennis to discover it in connection with the Balkanian Minister. Strong speeds to Dover, where he meets Langley and Attaché, builds a larger airship, the type, the London "Daily Wireless" as his means of escape, and sails for palace at Balkania. Strong, the Princess, Miss Hunt aboard, and Ivan in Bombers, the plot of Balkania to capture the King had preceded him, accompanied by Princess Diana and Ludwig, a neighboring practising to whom the King confers a watering list.

Near Romberg, on the Carpathians, is a small, rock-crowned plateau, inaccessible except to airships, called the King of None. Strong takes this his military race. Through Miss Hunt he plans one of his wonderful schemes, with the hands of Princess Diana, who induces him to use diplomacy with a good conflict.

Strong follows the German fair out to sea and secures an interview with the Princess, who tells the Hohenzollern, while one airship hovers nearly over the Princess' head, and the other is ordered to the palace at Balkania, where the Princess and the kaiser refuses to deal with Strong. The duel between the two airships results in Strong sinking a counter. Then he decides to see King Ed ward, but the King still refuses to treat with Strong. The King of Balkania starts to build a new airship. Princess Diana, who has lost all personal grace to avoid the result of the row in-forces Strong to avoid conflict. Strong confesses her love to her father in a preliminary step. Diana opens the door and finds the King of Balkania.

After the King of Balkania has left the room of Strong from his airship, Ivan wants the Capital of Balkania, intending to palace at Balkania. The Minister surrenders to Strong, but the King will not agree to act, and civil war ensues.

PART III.

Bombers Surrenders.

THE cavalry wheeled outwards and charged the main thoroughfare by Whitehall, sliding to the side streets. Then left the opposing infantry facing the King's guns. Even in the great width of the Grand Avenue it was a little difficult to wheel them about, but they came along with a crash, and the men began to unlimber.

From the line of troops by the Minister the last old officer rode forward and halted the gunners. But they worked on, and the officer, baffled, turned his horse and shouted something, but at their backs was the King giving his orders in his deep, full voice. He was not to be heard, and the men still faced the King at their backs.

At last the tall old officer threw up his arms in despair, wheeled his horse, and spurred back to the line of troops behind him. They opened up to let him through.

He gave his orders clearly and quickly, and the men rose a heavy shivering rattle of steel as the non-fixed harness. The officer rode again to fire, and a sheet of flame flashed across the roadway. The gunners rolled under the fire, but the King, who was without fear, rode in among them, and such as were not wounded stood fast by the guns.

The guns spoke, and the troops which lined upon the gunners were moved down as the hail of a storm. Those who escaped round them remained nothing but a mass of mangled men steeping the roadway.

A bugle rang out, and the cavalry came galloping from the shelter of the houses, swept into the main thoroughfare before the guns and charged. Table horses plunged over the dead and dying cavalrymen, and they swept up into the square.

Seeing from the battle west, M. Stalvan had passed the other troops, regrouped on the steps of the Ministry and stationed them in the Ministry Hotel. Strong was taken back by this reply, and to gain time he ticked as follows:

"You have already surrendered the city and the country once."

And while he still puzzled the answer came back.

"I regret that the first submission should have been final. It was none of my seeking that it was of a temporary nature."

Strong allowed so many minutes to elapse without making any answer to this that he himself received a query as to whether he was still attending to the instrument.

He had still been able to form no understanding of what this latest move portended, but, realizing that action was an imperative necessity, he demanded to know to what manner the city and the State were to be surrendered to him.

And again the reply amazed him.

"Our submission," M. Stalvan answered, "is complete. The Ministers and the deputies of the House of Representatives of the People—such, indeed, as remain of them—are gathered here with me. We, therefore, humbled and abased, are prepared to half an hour's time to receive you in the chamber of Deputies, where we shall, of course, be compelled to accept whatever terms you make."

Now this, again, gas perplexing.

Strong wondered to what lengths M. Stalvan's patriotism might carry him. Was it a lure, this move, designed to entrap him?

True, he could descend in the Dr. leading the Victor to cover his movements, but at the same time M. Stalvan and the rest of the deputies might be quite prepared to face death in their determination to capture him.

"There was no fear in Langley's face, but his hand was shaking as,he stretched it out to Strong."

To his perplexity, therefore, Strong ticked off a statement as follows:

"It would ill become me to stipulate for our personal safety, because were I to do so I might be required of the man who descended with him to the "Dr."

Presently it became plain that the men of M. Stalvan's decision was being communicated to the troops, for those regiments which remained in the outer spaces below were formed in a hollow square, and the old, gray-haired colonel who had defended the Ministry against the King rode into the centre and addressed the men.

At the conclusion of his address these drifted up to the "Victor" the sound of cheering and then the men were marched back to their stations.

After that there came trooping out from the Ministry several scores of apparently prosperous gentlemen, top-hatted and frock-coated. They were discussing matters with animation among themselves, and as they walked briskly across from the Ministry to the Chamber, they repeatedly glanced upward through the smoke which still hung heavily over the city to take stock of the "Victor" and the "Dr," which hovered at the great airship's side.

Last of all came M. Stalvan, active, but evidently broken by the night's events. He leaned heavily upon the arm of an officer in uniform.

Strong allowed another ten minutes to elapse before he ordered Arbuthnot to bring the "Dr" alongside the "Victor." Then he turned and addressed the other men.

He followed them briefly of what he was about to do, and expressed confident belief that all would go well. "At the same time," he concluded, "it is but possible that M. Stalvan may play me false. In that case I should like to know what you propose to do."

He looked carefully at every man, but at the last he kept his gaze fixed on Langley.

There was no fear in Langley's face, but his hand was shaking as he stretched it out to Strong.

"If any other man," said Langley, "had been guilty of the acts which you have committed this night, I don't suppose that any one of us would have forgiven him—but he, Douglas and Margaret—and I think I speak for all of us—we are as much devoted to your cause as ever. Should any harm befall you, should you fail to rescue your friends half an hour, you may leave the rest to us. I promise you that there shall not remain one stick or stone upon another in Romberg before night comes down again."

HOW would you like, supposing you were the husband, the man behind the check book, to get a bill like that for a single garment?

No doubt you imagined that the modern woman had reached the limit of extravagance in dress. You have observed her huge hats, laden, each one, with hundreds of dollars worth of plumes, her tiny slippers with high French heels twinkling with diamonds, her trailing gowns festooned with priceless laces, even unseen garter buckles and corset hooks wrought of precious metals and inset with gems.

You have probably exclaimed, "Surely this reckless waste of money can go no further!" But you have reckoned without your host—or hostess.

Now she is piling luxury on luxury, extravagance on extravagance, cost on cost. For she is embroidering her almost priceless furs with priceless jewels! Imperial Russian sable, fur of queens and empresses, costly and snowy royal ermine fit wear for a king, are not considered luxurious or royal enough for the queens of America. On them must be piled more wealth than the ransom of a king, more wealth than the dowries of princesses. Their beauty is not considered enough. They must be embellished with precious stones. Tassels made all of pearls, pierced and strung together, held at the top by huge cabochon emeralds, weight the bottom of some of these extremely costly garments. On others buttons of rough gold, set in Russian style with variously colored jewels, catch together hedges of heavy bullion cord.

But heavy gold embroideries, made of thread spun from the genuine metal, for with it there is no danger of tarnish, is the chosen trimming for furs. It may or may not be further enhanced by the addition of precious jewels—goodness knows these wonderful furs need no further elaboration. Their beauty lies in the beauty of suppleness and the sheen of the skins, but wilful women wishes otherwise and everyone knows that wilful woman must have her own way. If you don't give it to her she takes it anyway!

Of course, only the most supple and costly furs are chosen for these embellishments. Chinchilla is sometimes used, but more often ermine is the fur selected, for against its snowy background of short-clipped hair, the embroideries show to the greatest advantage, while the little black tipped tails give just the right note of contrast. Sometimes the embroidery is done directly on to the fur, but as ermine has a pelt almost as perishable as tissue paper, it does not stand the weight of the gold well, and so the embroideries are more often applied.

For opera and evening are these jewel-encrusted furs principally designed, but occasionally one sees a fur piece quite as elaborate intended for wear with afternoon calling gowns. Of this type is the long scarf of ermine shown in the illustration lettered "A." It is one of those picturesque directoire scarfs beloved of French women this season. They, with a careless disregard for the caresses of Jack Frost, hang them over their arms just at the elbows, the fur crossing the back nonchalantly somewhere below the waist; long ends sweeping to the ground in front and by the hands and fur up the arms buried in huge fur muffs to match. But American women, with more thought for the possible attentions of pneumonia, draw theirs up cosily about their shoulders and thus are better protected.

This scarf is really a lovely one of its kind. Made of snowy ermine skins, its lining a froth of creamy lace ruffles. It is studded with pearls, while as a final touch of elegance tassels made of seed pearls form a border at the bottom. The muff, which is one of the new barrel muffs soon to completely supercede the "throw over" variety now grown so hopelessly common, has also a broad band of the gold embroidery and rows of little black tails. An exquisite color scheme is formed by white fur, gold embroidery and the creamy lustre of the pearls.

But of far greater elaboration—and, incidentally, cost—are the wraps shown in "B" and "C." The ermine garment with bands of bullion embroidery all studded with gleaming jewels and jewel-studded balls swaying from the knotted ends is worth a small fortune. Of lovely and graceful lines, it speaks its French origin in every line. It is obviously only a garment intended for carriage wear—and a closed carriage at that—this is probably not an item to cause its lucky possessor any regret. The toque has a crown of jeweled embroidery matching the trimming of the wrap and is a source of enjoyment, and enjoyment is the chief excuse for their indulgence.

Chinchilla, that soft and becoming gray fur, trimmed with embroideries of dull gold, but often enough the appetite is not is physiologically worse off than the man silver and laced together with silver cords caught with jewelled buttons, makes of "B" a delightful garment. "B" is again of ermine, which, after all, forms the ideal fur for evening wear, so charming is it donned over delicately tinted fabrics. This time it has bands of Russian sable outlining the embroidered bands. This garment is cut on quaint, old-fashioned lines, suggestive of the dolmans of our mothers' young days. It, too, is obviously only for wear in a tempered atmosphere, for it is without sleeves.

There is no doubt that this is distinctly a fur season. Fur is used in all kinds of unexpected ways and on all kinds of unexpected garments. For instance, you would hardly expect to see a ball gown of palest blue-green satin bound to around the knees by a scarf of supple ermine, which is tied with a large bow and ends in the back, would you? Yet this was worn by one of this year's "buds" not long ago, and most fascinating was this surprising touch of fur on a dress quite untrimmed otherwise, save for a little delicate embroidery on the decolete corsage.

Fur bows worn with lingerie stock collars is a touch of capriciousness which appeals to the modern maiden. These are again worn quite without reference to any other bit of fur on the costume.

Not many whole dresses of fur are seen on this side of the water, although one or two importers early in the season showed some very good models in broadtail. But the smart women of Europe are wearing coats and scanty skirts or dresses cut all in one and buttoning straight up the front from hem to chin made entirely of fur. Some of these gowns are made with short skirts for skating or shooting, but quite as often they are designed with trailing skirts for calling wear, the supple skins being used in exactly the same way as velvet. A garment somewhat of this order is shown in the illustration lettered "H." In reality this is a trailing coat, but necessary touch of brilliancy being given by the jewelled embroidery simulating a girdle, which is applied directly to the fur. A white fox shawl collar and big muff of fox make a clever contrast.

Effects trailing down the back are quite as much in vogue this year in fur as in anything else. A tight band of fur alone will encase the neck, but down the back, far below the waist, will often hang a cascade of magnificent skins, so beautifully cured that they are as supple as satin and with much of satin's gloss and sheen. No doubt it's an excellent scheme to display the furs to the greatest advantage, but about the warmth of the wearer who breasts the cold wind driving or on foot is an put so sure. But vanity, vanity! And pride is proverbially supposed to feel no pain.

Of such an indiscretion is the fur seen in illustration "G." This is elaborate, with an inset of gold embroideries straight down its length, the design being outlined in precious stones. A fringe of sable tails finishes the ends of the stole-like hanging piece and a muff to match is carried.

While some of the dazzling fur garments worn are actually brilliant with real gold lace and embroideries and genuine jewels, imitation gives nearly as rich effects. Paste jewels now imitate wonderfully the real things and gold thread, although it has the defect of speedily tarnishing, gives a very rich effect. Certainly, some of those fur pieces are a delight to the eye with glint of gold and gleam of jewels. But, as I said before, they really do seem the limit of extravagance in women's attire, don't they?

Some After-Dinner Habits That Often Prove Injurious.

UNDER the title of "Post-Prandial Habits," the London Lancet discusses the effects upon health of the after-dinner coffee, cigar, cordial and other indulgencies customary to people who dine luxuriously.

Theoretically, such habits are calculated to interfere, and often in practise do interfere, seriously with the healthy disposal of the elements of the meal. From a purely physiological point of view, at all events, the post-prandial habits are superfluous and the force of their appeal to human nature is practically entirely psychological. Post-prandial habits, in short, have their origin in the fact that they are indulgence does interfere, seriously with the

A good and well-served dinner is appreciated, even when mere physiological requirements have been amply met. When one heat dish has been served a kind of craving is set up for prolonging the gustatory round, and the cup of coffee, the glass of port or liqueur, and, finally, the smoking of a cigar or other form of tobacco are considered to be the indispensable corollary to the meal.

To one man who does, as it is said, "does himself well," these things are the crowning attractions of a good dinner. They are, of course, nothing more than really acquired habits which, though associated with the meal, have in reality nothing to do with it, regarding it as a mere nutritious mass.

It is safe to assert that, generally speaking, the post-prandial habit is a physiologically bad one, and the man who regularly drinks coffee, port, or liqueur after dinner who does not.

It should be remembered, however, that the enjoyment of a meal and the experiencing of a sense of comfort after it conduce to its physiological realization, and the moderate indulgence of one or more of the post-prandial habits may thus be justified.

Considered entirely from a physiological point of view, the effects of a moderate indulgence in coffee, liqueur, or tobacco may even be favorable. This liquour is, after all, a carminative containing essential oils which while soothing increase the activity of the gastric circulation. They also frequently relieve the "tightness" due to fermentation and production of gas. Coffee, though it serves to keep the mental faculties clear and to stave off drowsiness, acts very often unfavorably by delaying digestion (which may account for its wakeful qualities) but is an antidote to alcohol.

No Matter How Many Magazines You Take

is the one you cannot afford to do without. Its subscribers of last year are subscribers this year—with their friends. This, after all, is the real test of a magazine's merit—that its readers tell their friends about it. You can be sure that in 1909 one feature in each issue will be of such universal interest as to dominate the magazine world for that month. As single instances, take COSMOPOLITAN'S great series of brilliant short stories by George Randolph Chester, or the intensely interesting reminiscences of Chauncey M. Depew. "The best—no matter what it costs"—is the motto which makes COSMOPOLITAN resemble no other magazine but COSMOPOLITAN.

Just a few among the many other distinguished contributors whose work will appear this year in COSMOPOLITAN are: Daniel J. Sully, the "Cotton King," who will reveal one of the most startling economic situation that have ever threatened the country's welfare; Herbert Quick, author of some of the most brilliant short stories since the tales of Poe and Maupassant; Ellis Parker Butler and Henry C. Rowland, masters of the art of short-story writing; Eliza Calvert Hall, whose "Aunt Jane" will still be with us, and Charles Edward Russell, who is preparing a history of Charlestown. There will be articles on financiers and Wall Street by Edwin Le Favre; sketches of the world's greatest cities by Samuel G. Blythe; contributions by Elbert Hubbard, famous Lecturer and Editor of "The Philistine,"—and these are but a few of the master minds who will force COSMOPOLITAN to the very front of the great magazines.
